Bryan company provides daily wake-up service

TROY HALL
 The Battalion Staff

Waking up in the morning is next to impossible for some of us. We forget to set the alarm before going to bed, the power goes off during the night or the ease of pushing the snooze button prolongs those last few minutes of sleep.

If you are one of those people who just can't wake up, why not try a wake-up service?

ACX Communications, a Bryan answering service, provides that wake-up service. For a monthly fee, customers have an opportunity for daily wake-up calls.

Colleen Cooper, an ACX Communications representative, says customers can specify which days and times they want to be called when setting up accounts.

"Or if they want wake-up calls periodically throughout the month, then each night they give us a call and request a wake-up call for a certain time," Cooper says.

The one-month-old service is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Cooper says about 15 people are using the service, including several Texas A&M students.

"The service is especially nice for students who need to be at class at a certain time or stayed up until 2 a.m. studying and didn't hear the alarm," Cooper says. "They are going to hear the telephone ring."

ACX Communications' employees make all the wake-up calls.

"We're cheerful when waking up our customers," she says. "Sometimes we will tell them the weather. If the weather is rainy, we will tell them they need to wear their raincoat."

When asked if employees have encountered any amusing situations waking up customers, Cooper laughed, saying the information is "confidential."

"Engineer of the Century" Paul MacCready will discuss creative and environmental options available to Texas A&M students and faculty members during his two-day visit to the University.

MacCready will give a presentation at 7 p.m. Tuesday in 108 Harrington.

He will discuss what engineers and inventors can do to help solve world environmental problems. A slide show will accompany his speech.

MacCready invented the Gossamer Condor, the first human-powered airplane. His company, Aerovironment Inc., now is designing several electrical automobiles for General Motors.

He was awarded the "Engineer of the Century" gold medal by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers in 1981 when he unveiled the solar-powered aircraft — the Solar Challenger.

MacCready's trip to the University is sponsored by the A&M College of Architecture, College of Engineering and the Provost's Office for Research and Graduate Study.

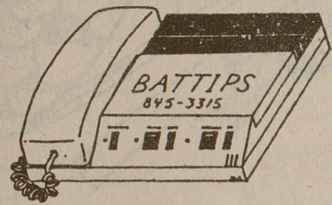

During his visit, he also will speak to several architecture and engineering classes and will meet Tuesday with A&M faculty members.
