Calabalala S Experts say feeding of deer caused attack Two Chicken

BRYAN (AP) — Experts blamed people who hand-fed a deer that grew from a fawn to 160 pounds for the death of a man whose heart gave out after he was attacked by the animal

"A deer that's lost its fear of man is the most dangerous animal on Earth," James Kroll, a nationally recognized deer biologist and re-searcher at Stephen F. Austin State University, says. "There is absolutely no way for a man to control a mature whitetail buck."

Authorities found Monday the body of Charlie Jackson Coleman, 61, of Caldwell, in a thicket. Officers shot and killed a whitetail buck deer that was found standing over the body after the eight-point deer charged them.

"From the information we've got-ten, the deer had been in the area for six or seven years, and had become so used to people that some people were feeding him by hand," Burleson County chief sheriff's dep-uty Tom Randall says.

"According to the game warden, someone had bottle-fed this deer as a fawn, then after a period of time turned him loose and he just stayed in the area," Randall says. "Some of those people were pretty upset that we shot the deer. There were more than a few tears shed over him.

An autopsy showed Coleman died of heart failure and not from blows from the buck's hooves.

"He apparently just fought until his heart gave out," Randall said Wednesday.

Coleman, a collector of antique bottles, apparently was looking for bottles in the woods at the time he confronted the deer.

Coleman inadvertently may have provoked the buck by walking through the thicket bent over, looking for bottles, and the deer was just following its instincts, which had been warped by long association with humans.

"That's a threatening posture — bent down close to the ground —and the buck probably just decided this was another aggressive male approaching, so he reacted just as he would with another buck deer," Kroll said.

Whitetail bucks also become aggressive each fall during their mating season, called the rut.

"People don't realize that a buck deer in rut changes," David Rideout, a technical guidance biologist with the Texas Parks and Wildlife De-partment, says. "The deer's hor-mones change. Their body produces more testosterone, which makes more testosterone, which makes them more aggressive."

Over $3 million in drugs, money stolen from police

HOUSTON (AP) — Police are in-vestigating the theft of about $3 milworth of illegal drugs and lion $2,000 in cash from the building where officers train their drug-sniffing dogs.

The two pounds of cocaine, 20 pounds of marijuana and an unspec-ified amount of Mexican heroin road. Other than a sign warning were taken Monday night, police said

The department's internal affairs division is investigating, but officials though officers from other police say it's too soon to say if the burglary agencies also bring dogs for training.

Kendrick, who oversees the internal affairs division, said.

"As it stands right now, we're treating it like any other burglary," he said. "It just happened to be one of our places. I guess sooner or later those things are bound to occur to us.

Assistant Chief Tom Koby, whose command oversees the K-9 opera- else

tion, said he couldn't speculate if the burglary was set up by an officer. "We've got magic questions, and we don't have magic answers yet," Koby said.

The training facility in southeast Houston is at an old incinerator complex that is entered by a winding people to keep out, it has no security was an inside job. "We're hoping the investigation will tell us that," Assistant Chief J.L. One police source told the Hous-ton Chronicle that the burglary must have been an inside job, although he would not speculate if officers actually participated in the theft.

Add it up, and it's not tough to figure that somebody on the inside had to tell somebody on the out-side," the newspaper's source said. "It could have been somebody who brought a friend out there, and that friend may have told somebody

Dear Friend,

Being a courtroom lawyer for 17 years and judge from Austin County I know there is something special about the people in our part of Texas We still hold fast to the values like honesty, integrity, hard work and family. We believe a man's word is his bond and we speak as we pass on the street because we know every person is important.

I want to bring that heritage and balance to the nine member Court at the only rural judge on the Texas 1st Court of Appeals because Fairness what justice really is.

I ask for your vote and support in this effort.
