Duke says his message strikes a national chord

ment at this time," Duke said Sunday. "Millions of Americans are supporting me. ... I feel this is only the beginning. I know the kind of vote I got in Louisiana I could have gotten in almost any state." Even while conceding defeat in Saturday's gubernatorial election to Edwin Edwards, the former Ku Klux Klan grand wizard immediately began sounding national themes, saying his message of protecting the rights of whites, turning back affirmative action, reforming welfare and "preserving Western heritage" have struck a significant chord across the country. "I will be a spokesman for these ideas, much as Jesse Jackson is a spokesman for liberal policies," said Duke, who ran as a Republican. "The time is coming when the American majority will find its way to its rights and its heritage."

Behind the scenes, Duke expressed delight with scattered polls giving him more name recognition than some Democratic presidential contenders. And on Sunday he returned to the national talk-show circuit he visited frequently during the campaign, hopping from CNN to ABC to PBS.

"Everybody knows who I am now," Duke said in an interview with The Associated Press. "And they know what I stand for. It's the same thing they talk about in their kitchens. They're starting to talk about them publicly now."

Analysts said Duke's heavy loss to Edwards probably ruled out a statewide campaign next fall for the former Nazi sympathizer, but not a repeat of his 1988 foray into select presidential primaries, or a race for Congress next year that would allow him to take his messages to the Washington light, or both.

"I don't think he can win a statewide office," said Lawrence Powell, associate professor of political science at Tulane University. "He can't beat Edwin Edwards with his political baggage, he can't beat anyone here."

"Nationally, he could do better, I think, because of his name recognition," Powell added. "His name recognition, plus the economy and the backlash against government ... would seem to provide a happy hunting ground."

Duke said he's gotten contributions from all 50 states.

Croatia refuses to trade land for sovereignty sualties suffered by the army or Serb insurgents, neither of which provides comprehensive figures.

Serb militias and the Serb-led army have captured nearly a third of Croatia, which has refused to give up any land in exchange for sovereignty. Serbia claims ethnic Serbs would be persecuted in an independent Croatia.

Croatian defense officials contacted in Osijek, the center of the eastern Slavonia region, confirmed a report by the Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency that Borovo Naselje had fallen to the army and Serb insurgents.

They said fighting was continuing in Vukovar itself an hour after the 6 p.m. truce was to start.

Tanjug reported that Borovo Naselje fell after several days of intense fighting, and that Yugoslav flags were hoisted on many of the high-rise buildings still standing.

Serb-led forces previously had been reported within about 200 yards of Vukovar's center, but it was not clear how much of the town they controlled.

Many of Vukovar's buildings have been leveled during the three-month siege and 500 people are trapped in the city's bombed-out hospital.

Croatian reports said Osijek was shelled overnight, and that sporadic shooting was reported in the Adriatic port of Dubrovnik.

A ferry packed with 3,500 people fled the besieged city took people to Pula, the lands of Rab and Mali Losinj and the home port, Rijeka.

On Friday in New York, U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said, U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, his representative in the Yugoslav crisis, and Richard Gooding, the chief of U.N. peacekeeping would leave Saturday for Yugoslavia.

Perez de Cuellar said the two envoys to arrive in Yugoslavia on Monday to propose a possible peacekeeping force. But he said mission would not be sent unless both sides can maintain a truce.

Health Center lists signs of anorexia, bulimia control when eating. A bulimic frequently experiences episodes of binge eating and then purges, usually through induced vomiting, abusive laxatives and diuretics, fasting or overexercising.

Some symptoms of anorexia caused by severe weight loss include:

- dry skin and hair
- insomnia
- general weakness
- constipation and digestive problems
- amenorrhea (loss of menstrual periods)
- lower body temperature to retain body warmth

Some symptoms of bulimia include:

- dehydration
- severe dental problems
- constipation and digestive disorders
- muscle weakness

When anorexia and bulimia progress, weakness and irregularities might develop in the heart that can be life threatening.

Some of the signs of eating disorders include:

- "feeling fat" when weight is normal or abnormally low
- feeling uncomfortable after consuming a normal or small sized meal
- much time is spent thinking about food, eating, weight and body image
- categorize food as "good" or "bad"
- feel anxious when eating

around other people

If you notice that a friend might have an eating disorder, consider some of the following steps:

- learn more about the disorder by talking to a professional
- talk to your friend but keep the conversation informal and confidential
- express your concerns to your friend about their health, not their weight or appearance
- if your friend acknowledges a problem, suggest some possible resources
- do not take on the role of counselor or food monitor

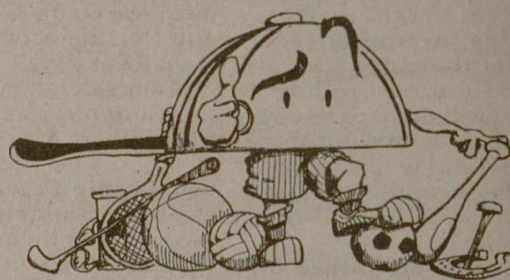

Although the majority of people who experience anorexia or bulimia are women, men are not excluded from developing the disease. Athletes - such as gymnasts, dancers and wrestlers - also are at risk because many must maintain their weight to perform.

Anorexia and bulimia are psychological disorders which are also important to see a professional help.

The Student Counseling Center located in the YMCA building offers this service to A&M students. If you have any questions or want information on eating disorders or general nutrition, call the Health Education Center at 845-1341. A group program on eating disorders is open to students on Nov. 26 at 5:15 p.m. at A.P. Beutel Health Center, room 016. Call 845-6111 if you wish to attend.
