LUBBOCK (AP) — Fifth-grader Michael Buckberry, whose mother sued the Lubbock Independent School District to modify its dress code restricting boys' hair length, cut his hair under protest to conform with school policy. Michael, a student at Roscoe Wilson Elementary, waged a battle for three months against the LISD, refusing to cut a four-inch lock of hair, called a tail, which violates the district's new dress code.

But Kathy Buckberry, the boy's mother, said she had her son's locks clipped to keep him from being punished in "in-school suspension," a room where student delinquents are isolated during school hours. "The decision to cut Michael's hair was made under protest," said Buckberry. "We are still very much opposed to the LISD's policy."

CIRCLE K: will meet in 223B Zachry.

Michael returned to classes Monday without his tail. "I am happy to be back at school, but I am sad I cut my hair," Michael said Monday. "I would be happy if we won the case and I could grow my tail back."

Buckberry and the parents of Lubbock High School sophomore Yacatico Kelley, sued the LISD to modify the hair policy, which pro-hibits boys from wearing longer than shoulder-length hair, pony tails, tails, braids or designs in their hair.

The parents claim the dress code violates the Texas Equal Rights Amendment because the policy does not restrict girls' hair length. District Judge Bradley Under-wood ruled in favor of the school district last month

The boys' parents are considering an appeal.
