Three-year-olds Alice Ainsworth and Steven Ross try on hats at the Toy Library in the Lincoln Recreation Center.

By MELINDA COX
Of The Battalion Staff

At one College Station library you'll find more Mattel and Fisher Price than you will Shakespeare and Hemingway. Although most libraries exchange books and information, the Toy Library in College Station provides toys and a warm, friendly atmosphere for children and their parents.

The library was formed in 1982 by a group of mothers working with Edna Gibson, former president of the Brazos Valley Association for the Education of Young Children. "The Toy Library is a cooperative organization open to all parents of children 6 years of age and under," publicity chairwoman Jacqueline Gramann says. "The primary goals of the library are to provide a selection of quality toys for young children, while offering opportunities for positive play experience."

Gramann says many married students at Texas A&M, especially international students, use the library. "We know international students at A&M use the program," Gramann says. "They can't pack up all their children's toys and bring them to this country."

T.O.Y. LIBRARY

Gramann says the library also is a way for mothers and fathers to meet new people and check out toys for their children.

Parents can bring their children to play while they get a chance to talk with other people in the same types of situations.

The Toy Library requires a $6 membership fee for one year, plus a 25 cent charge each time a toy is checked out.

Gramann says children are allowed to take home one toy at a toys" children might choose. He says the sizable selection allows children to try different toys with little financial investment.

"The Toy Library provides toys carefully selected to aid in this exploration," Gramann says. Some members in the library also have organized playgroups involving activities with parents and children outside the library, he says.

Melissa Livingston, playgroup coordinator, says playgroups are useful for new people in the community.

"The playgroups fill a specific need for people moving into the community," Livingston says. "Kids become good friends and parents can set up their own playgroups."

The Toy Library, however, will conduct a survey to determine who would benefit the most from these type of programs.

"I think a survey is important because it would help us target people who might benefit from the Toy Library," Gramann says.

The library is a community resource that helps parents and children make the most of stressful but important years, Gramann says.

The library is open from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. every other Tuesday and Wednesday at the Lincoln Recreation Center, 1100 Eleanor St., in College Station.

Judge orders protection for retarded woman, child

LUBBOCK (AP) — A district judge's order takes extra precaution to protect a profoundly retarded woman and her child from her brother-in-law, who has been accused of raping the woman and fathering the child.

District Judge Brad Underwood Tuesday issued the order after ruling there is "clear and present danger of family violence" from Jimmy Wayne Wooten toward Debra Lynn Thomas and her son, David Lynn Thomas, who was born Jan. 1.

Children's Protective Services caseworker Hortensia Estrada appealed to the court for the protective order to ensure the safety of Thomas and her baby.

Thomas was released from University Medical Center on Monday to a temporary group home for retarded residents run by the state, according to Dona Hamilton, an assistant attorney general.

Wooten was being held Wednesday in the Lubbock County Jail on $250,000 bond.

The court ordered Wooten to refrain from committing family violence on Thomas or David Lynn Thomas or any member of their household and from directly communicating with Thomas and David Lynn Thomas or any member of their household in a threatening or harassing manner.

The judge also ordered Wooten not to go within 100 yards of the home of the woman and her son and not to go near the residence of his wife, Dori Wooten, who is caring for the baby.

The order also says Wooten cannot go to or near the Lubbock residence of Scott and Kathy Ramsey, where David Lynn Thomas sometimes stays, and says he cannot remove David Lynn Thomas from the possession of Mrs. Wooten or from the jurisdiction of the court.

The order does not prohibit Wooten from visiting with his two children and wife.

Underwood also ordered Mrs. Wooten, Thomas' sister and legal guardian, to abide by Tuesday's order, and he ordered Mrs. Wooten not to allow Wooten to violate any of the orders.

Wooten, 40, was arrested and charged last week in the April rape of Thomas, 33, his sister-in-law and a profoundly retarded former Lubbock State School resident.

According to police, Thomas has the mental capacity of a 2-year-old and does not realize she has given birth.

Officials said DNA tests comparing the blood of Thomas' child to blood samples given to police by Wooten and 10 state school employees resulted in Wooten's arrest.

Mrs. Wooten will continue to care for the baby, said Fred Seale, regional director for the Department of Human Services.

Court denies appeal for damages

AUSTIN (AP) — The mother of a man who drowned because of the negligence of a state mental health facility cannot receive monetary damages for her grief, the Texas Supreme Court ruled.

The court Wednesday denied the appeal of Vera Bell Robinson, who sought mental anguish damages stemming from her son's 1984 death.

Tommy Robinson, 27, drowned while in the care of the Central Texas MHMR Center, which took him and other clients swimming at Lake Brownwood.

In an earlier ruling, the state Supreme Court upheld a jury verdict that the facility's negligence in not providing Robinson, an epileptic, with a life preserver, led to his death.

But that jury awarded only funeral expenses to Robinson's mother.

She appealed that ruling to the 11th Court of Appeals in Eastland and lost. The Supreme Court, by denying a writ of error in the case, upheld that decision.

Robinson was Tommy's grandmother and adopted him as her son, according to her attorney's court pleadings.

She raised him from the time he was 5 but admitted him to the facility about two years before his death because of her age and she felt he could receive better care there, her attorney said.

Humana orientation

Humana Hospital is offering an orientation meeting at 6:30 p.m. today in 200 Heldenfels for Texas A&M students interested in volunteering during the spring semester.

Volunteers would be involved with the Aggie Volunteer Program organized to give medical students and other health-oriented students practical experience in a healthcare setting.

Students unable to attend the meeting should call 764-5102 for more information.
