It was a regularly scheduled inspection.

David Jefferson, a registered sanitarian at the department, said restaurants with scores of 95 or above generally have excellent operations and facilities. He said restaurants with scores in the 70s or low 80s usually have serious violations in the health report.

Scores can be misleading, Jefferson said, because restaurants can get the same score by having several minor violations or a few major violations. He said the minor violations can be corrected during the inspection. Point deductions or violations in the report range from one point (minor violations) to five points (major violations).

Jefferson said the department might close a restaurant if the score is below 60, the personnel have infectious diseases, the restaurant lacks adequate refrigeration, there is a sewage backup in the building or the restaurant has a complete lack of sanitization for the food equipment.

The department inspects each restaurant every six months. Jefferson said a follow-up inspection is sometimes required if a restaurant has a four- or five-point violation that cannot be corrected during the inspection, or if there are numerous small violations.

Gov. Richards names victim to criminal justice board

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin woman who was the victim of rape, stabbing and beating was appointed to the Texas Board of Criminal Justice today to help oversee state prison, parole and probation programs.

Gov. Ann Richards said her appointment of Ellen Webb Halbert helps fulfill a campaign promise that victims will have a greater voice in criminal justice matters.

"The door of our criminal justice system has been opened to those advocating the rights of victims of violent crime," Richards said.

Hale in 1986 was attacked in her home by a man wearing a "ninja" costume. He raped her, stabbed her and beat her with a hammer. She recovered and was able to testify at his trial, and her assailant is serving a life sentence.

Sail

more use of the rules and use them to your advantage, like trying to make the other guy foul you. That's the kind of racing we excel at."

Rogers says there also are races where all the boats are turned loose at the same time, almost like sailing's equivalent of a drag race.

Sailing contests are judged based on tactical races, and not necessarily the boat's speed.

One point is awarded for first place, two points for second place and so on. At the end of the regatta, A and B division scores are combined into one score, with the lowest scoring team declared the winner.

"A typical regatta will have the same number of races as there are entrants," Hiebert says. "So if 15 schools are entered, there will be 15 races. The courses are short — it takes about 10 to 15 minutes a race."

The sailing team usually races 14-foot boats called Intercollegiate 420s, two-person boats crewed by a skipper and one crewperson.

The skipper is responsible for steering the boat and keeping it flat on the water and for running the main "sheet," or sail. The crewperson runs the jib sail.

Most sailing teams have coaches and are connected with large private yacht clubs. The A&M sailing team, though, doesn't have a coach.

"We're working on trying to find one right now but we don't have that kind of money," he says. "Ideally, it would be great if we could find a graduate student with experience in boating."

The sailing team is not University sponsored, so the team receives about half of its funding from the A&M recreational sports program. They also raise money with fundraisers.

"We receive donations from individuals and yacht clubs," Rogers said. "We work with several different yacht clubs, like one in Fort Worth. The Conroe Yacht Club holds a Go Texan Regatta each year and then donates all of the proceeds to us."

Rogers says home teams supply all competitors with boats, but even without having to worry about transporting boats around the country, the team's expenses still are high.

"I really enjoy sailing," Hiebert says. "Collegiate team racing is definitely the way to get into it."

Missiles on truck intact after rear-end accident

CLYDE (AP) — Missiles being hauled to California were undamaged in an accident Thursday involving two trucks, the Air Force said.

Explosives experts from Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene checked the missiles. Capt. John Ames said they were "undamaged and intact."

Ames declined to confirm reports the civilian rig carried nine Navy intercept missiles. Callahan County dispatcher Rudy Arredondo earlier confirmed that cargo.

Navy spokesman Lt. Timothy O'Leary in Dallas said there was never any danger of explosion of the standard surface-to-air missiles.

"These missiles were safed for transport," O'Leary said. "In that condition they're very rugged and very durable."

The truck was rear-ended just east of here, on Interstate 20, Arredondo said. The driver of the missile-hauling truck and the driver of the other rig were slightly hurt.

Department of Public Safety trooper Bill Russell identified the missile-truck driver as Ovis Rhodes Jr. of Jemison, Ala. The relief driver was his father, Ovis Rhodes Sr.

Operating the other truck was Larry Connolly of Sweetwater.

Both Rhodes Jr. and Connolly were treated and released from Hendrick Medical Center in Abilene, following the 4:25 a.m. crash.

Westbound lanes of Interstate 20 were blocked off for one-half mile.

The missiles were being hauled from Naval facilities in Charleston, S.C., to Seal Beach, Calif., Arredondo said.
