Street violence erupts, kills six protesters

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Rumors of a plot to free the jailed leader of a Jan. 6 coup attempt provoked street violence Sunday that left at least six people dead and eight wounded, according to independent radio reports.
 The dead included four reputed agents of the ousted Duvalier dictatorship lynched by a mob and two protesters shot by soldiers, the reports said.
 Government and military officials denied there had been an attempt to free coup leader Roger Lafontant and said he and his 15 alleged conspirators remained under heavy guard at the National Penitentiary.
 Radio reports said the disturbances began before daybreak as slum dwellers erected barricades of flaming tires and debris in many sections of Port-au-Prince, capital of this impoverished nation of 6 million.

In suburban Carrefour, soldiers opened fire on an unruly crowd, killing at least two protesters, Radio Haiti Inter said. At least eight were wounded, Radio Metropole reported. An earlier report erroneously said eight people were killed in the incident.
 Radio Antilles said rioters burned a police-fire station in the neighborhood, but it was unclear whether the burning occurred before or after soldiers fired on the crowd.
 In a separate incident, a mob lynched four men reputedly linked to the 29-year Duvalier dictatorship, which ended in 1986.

President flees, rebels seize control of Somali capital, take over airport

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Guerrillas on Sunday won apparent control of Somalia after a month of fighting forced longtime President Mohamed Siad Barre from his official residence. A Western doctor who just left Mogadishu said rebels had taken over the airport and main radio station.
 Siad Barre's whereabouts remained unknown. Reports from Somalia's capital said he may have fled to Kismayu, south of Mogadishu, one of the few sections of the Horn of Africa nation of 8 million believed still loyal to him.
 Celebrations broke out Saturday night across Mogadishu after the rebels drove Siad Barre from the presidential mansion and seized state radio; on Sunday the guerrillas tightened their grip by capturing the airport, the last government stronghold, Dr. Marc Gastello Etchejorry said.

"The information from Mogadishu is that the fighting has finished," Etchejorry said. "There is no more shooting. The rebels have announced that all of the city is under their control."
 There was no independent confirmation of the situation due to widespread communications problems.
 The rebel United Somali Congress in their claim, which was broadcast over the formerly government-run Radio Mogadishu, said they seized control of Mogadishu at 8:30 p.m. Saturday.
 "Last night... the government and the responsibility of the Somali people were taken over by the USC movement," the rebels said. "We are addressing you from Radio Mogadishu, the voice of the Somali people." The broadcast was monitored in Nairobi.
 Etchejorry, of the humanitarian agency Doctors Without Borders, said that after Saturday's rebel victories the streets filled with people dancing, hugging, kissing and shooting guns into the air to celebrate Siad Barre's downfall.

 Etchejorry was one of six media that Doctors Without Borders sent to Mogadishu the past week to treat war casualties. He left the city Sunday morning for the Kenyan coastal city of Mombasa, where Doctors Without Borders is coordinating its Somalia effort. He spoke in a telephone interview.
 The rebels, who draw their strength from the large central Hawiye clan, have pledged to replace Siad Barre's government with a multiparty democracy, hold free elections and allow some form of regional autonomy for the arid nation's clan-based people.

War increases Army combat medic training

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Army combat medic training has been increased from five to seven days a week at Fort Sam Houston as war rages in the Persian Gulf, officials said.
 Col. John Mullins, who runs the Joint Readiness Training Command at Fort Sam Houston, said as the possibility of a land war draws closer, full classes of combat medics are being trained in San Antonio and at Marine installations on the East and West coasts.
 Medics are being trained to treat every injury from chemical burns to bad skin.
 Troops wounded in Operation Desert Storm will be treated first by a medic or combat lifesaver, Mullins said.
 "The primary object is to resuscitate and keep the patient alive and maintain circulation with fluids," Mullins said.

 If the wound is serious, the victim is moved by hand-carried litter or by truck to the next echelon, which the Army calls the battalion aid station. Or, the soldier is moved to a beachhead evacuation station in the case of the Marines.
 These aid centers are highly mobile and usually are established a mile or so from combat, Mullins said.
 At this level, there will be a doctor or a physician's assistant. The goal is to keep the patient alive for transport to a higher level of care — first to a division-aid station and then to a hospital, where critical lifesaving surgery could be performed.

Modern war is so lethal that advances in medical care during the past 25 years will have little effect on the odds of survival for U.S. troops who may be wounded in ground combat, experts say.
 Studies of 8,000 casualties in the Vietnam War show death in ground combat generally was so quick that even if there were a hospital next to every foxhole, there was little that medical science could have done to save lives, said Col. Ron Bellamy, of the Joint Readiness Command at Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington, D.C.
 "Eighty percent of those who die in combat will die within seconds," Bellamy said. Another 10 percent of the fatalities die within minutes, and the final 10 percent will die during evacuation or treatment.

Seven slain in unrest; coup foiled

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Mourners massed in the black township of Sebokeng on Sunday to bury 39 African National Congress supporters killed in a recent massacre, and police reported seven people slain in unrest nationwide.
 Meanwhile, leaders of the nominally independent Ciskei homeland said Sunday their military foiled a coup attempt and killed the rebel leader, identified as a former member of the ruling Military Council. A second alleged rebel leader was wounded in a shootout at a roadblock leading to the Ciskei capital, Bisho.
 The report on seven deaths came two days before a planned meeting of the nation's most powerful black leaders — Nelson Mandela of the ANC and Mangosuthu Buthelezi of the Inkatha Freedom Party — considered crucial to ending fighting between rival black groups.
 Police and the military, concerned about possible violence at the Sebokeng funeral, set up roadblocks on streets leading into the township outside Johannesburg. About 15,000 people gathered in the township stadium where coffins were displayed on the field. Youths chanted ANC slogans.

On Jan. 12, at a funeral vigil not far from the stadium, assailants with AK-47 assault rifles fired into a crowd of ANC mourners and killed at least 39. One of those being buried Sunday was ANC activist Mphahlele Christoffel Nangalemba, whose first funeral vigil was the scene of the Sebokeng massacre. Nangalemba was found strangled near Sebokeng on Jan. 5.
 Speakers Sunday blamed police for the massacre, alleging they did not provide adequate security. "The massacre is the direct responsibility of the police, and we charge them with criminal negligence in not carrying out their duties," Thomas Nkobi, a member of the ANC's National Executive Committee, said. Police said they left the Jan. 12 vigil at the ANC's request.
 After listening to speakers, mourners followed a procession from the stadium to a nearby cemetery for the burials.
 Motive for the massacre remains unclear.
 Local residents alleged it was carried out by local gang members recruited by Inkatha, which denied involvement.
