Spending freeze bill passes Senate

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a bill Monday that would freeze some state spending and concentrate authority over the budget with Texas' top three elected officials — governor, lieutenant governor and House speaker.
 "It is essential that we get a control on the spending side of state government before we even start talking about revenue problems," Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said.

"There is just a great deal of misunderstanding on how the concept will work overall. I'm sold on the concept, and I'm like everybody else — I'd like to see ... what happens when it gets over here."

— Gib Lewis, House speaker

The Senate passed Montford's bill to the House, 29-0, but Montford said he thought House amendments would result in the final version being written by a Senate-House conference committee.
 Montford, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said the state comptroller had estimated that the bill would save $50 million in the fiscal year ending Aug. 31 and an additional $90 million over the 1992-93 biennium.
 The bill would freeze spending and hiring beginning Friday and would launch an intense round of audits and reviews to streamline state government to help make up a $296 million deficit this fiscal year.

"In order to respond immediately to this deficit, this is the best idea we could come up with," Montford said.
 In addition, lawmakers face a shortfall of $4.5 billion to $4.6 billion to continue the current level of state services for the next two years.
 The bill would place Gov. Ann

Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, in charge of overseeing the review of all state agencies, programs and services conducted by another new board called the Performance Audit Panel.

The seven-member audit panel would be headed by state Comptroller John Sharp.
 Caught up in the spending freeze would be state hirings; purchase and leasing of equipment; construction; and consultants, unless a waiver was obtained from the Legislative Budget Board.

Exempt from the freeze would be funding for schools; prison construction; mental health facilities; youth correctional facilities; and Capitol restoration.

To meet a self-imposed Friday deadline is "going to be quite a feat," Montford said. "Every day you're going to obviously not have as much money recouped."

Speaker Lewis said, "Our plan is to put it on the fast track," but he added that it would be very difficult to win 100 votes of the 150-member House for immediate effect of the proposal.

"There is just a great deal of misunderstanding on how the concept will work overall. I'm sold on the concept, and I'm like everybody else — I'd like to see ... what happens when it gets over here," Lewis said.

School finance alternatives considered

AUSTIN (AP) — State leaders said Monday they are examining other school finance alternatives besides a proposed statewide property tax that would replace the local property levy for schools.

Both Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis said they still see the statewide tax as the top option for meeting the Texas Supreme Court order to balance funding between rich and poor school districts.

Gov. Ann Richards, who last week said a statewide tax could be placed before voters as a take-it or leave-it option to court control of school finances, said no decision has been made.

"There are no done deals here," Richards told a meeting of school administrators. "Every possible solution is on the table for discussion among the state's leadership."

The Supreme Court, in a 9-0 vote, declared the school finance system unconstitutional and said the state must act by April 1 or face an order to stop state spending on schools.

"I think it will be very clear and very simple for you, if you will read the court's decision, that if ... the public does not agree to the system that we devise, you can get ready to have your schools administered by the courts of Texas," Richards said.

Asked later whether the proposed state property tax is the best solution, Richards said, "I don't know that we know that."

"There is no perfect plan. I will guarantee you that," she said. "The question is just trying to find the one that ... will actually work and that we can get done."

Bullock called the statewide property tax "a good, clean-cut way" to reform school finance.

"That doesn't make it the best way, but it looks like it's still right there on top," he said.

The proposed constitutional amendment would require approval of two-thirds of the Legislature and voter approval in a statewide election. A number of school districts, including large districts and poor ones, say they are troubled by the plan.

Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said it is "very difficult" to pass any constitutional amendment that has opposition.

He has appointed a group of lawmakers to draft an alternative to the property tax proposal in case it fails.
