U.S. forces fire missiles to halt tanks

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Eleven Marines were killed, two were injured and heavy Iraqi casualties were reported Wednesday in the heaviest ground fighting so far in the Persian Gulf war, U.S. military officials said.

The Marines were the first American ground forces to die in battle in the 2-week-old war with Iraq. The battle, which started Tuesday night, began when Iraqi tanks were spotted moving into Saudi Arabia.

U.S. Marines fired anti-tank weapons and called in air strikes to repel an assault by tank-led Iraqi forces.

As the fighting intensified, allied troops engaged Iraqi soldiers along a 25-mile long front extending from Kuwait's Al Wafra oil field to the abandoned Saudi border town of Khafji, a Saudi military spokesman said.

At a news conference in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, U.S. commander Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf said 24 Iraqi tanks were destroyed by allied forces.

By late afternoon, about 50 Iraqi troops in armored personnel carriers were holding central Khafji, said U.S. Marines and Saudi troops deployed on the outskirts of the town. It was the first time Iraq held any Saudi territory since the war be-

Allied troops storm town held by Iraq

KHAFJI, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi-led allied forces stormed the Iraqi-held Saudi frontier town of Khafji on Wednesday night, but it was unclear whether they took the town or were driven off by Iraqi forces.

Some light armored Saudi forces made it in to the center of the city, but other allied forces, including U.S. Marines, were forced into a feverish retreat when pelted by Iraqi rocket fire just south of the city.

Marines said the Saudis had made it deep into Khafji and had engaged Iraqi forces, who had taken the border town early Wednesday in the first major ground battle of the Gulf War.

It was unclear early today whether the Saudis held the town or were forced out.

About an hour after the 11 p.m. (2 p.m. CST) attack, much of the allied attacking force retreated. Several armored Saudi ambulances and troop transports rushed toward the town.

The attack began after 15 minutes of heavy Marine artillery fire designed to soften up the Iraqi defenses.

Dozens of light armored personnel carriers and Qatar army MAX-30 tanks lined the north-south highway and proceeded toward Khafji.

Just as the convoy reached the city lines, Iraqi positions to the north and northwest pelted the vehicles with what Marines said were rocket-propelled grenades.

War with Iraq" at the An Nam Tea House Wednesday night. History department professors and local residents also spoke.

Teach-in gives faculty, students chance to air views on Gulf crisis

Texas A&M faculty members and students expressed their views Wednesday night at a teach-in on why the Persian Gulf War began, and what can be done to achieve and keep peace.

About 150 people gathered at An Nam Tea House to hear speakers talk about personal experiences of war, religious values, and the effect of the Persian Gulf War on the environment.

Master of ceremonies Suzanne Chase, a sophomore political science major, has a 19-year-old brother stationed in Saudi Arabia. Chase said the teach-in was about "facing the facts" concerning the United States' actions in the Persian Gulf War.

"Our purpose here tonight is not to look back on what we should have done or what means we could have taken to avoid the war from happening," Chase said.

"But rather, we are gathered here to discuss the present and the future."

Terry Anderson, associate professor of history at A&M, said he thinks the United States rushed into war because of the impending 1992 presidential election.

"(Bush) would be another president who did not lose the war," Anderson said. "And of course, we only lost one, right?"

Anderson, a veteran of the Vietnam War, said the Persian Gulf War is unlike Vietnam for several reasons — this time the United States knows who the enemy is, this War is not a civil war and the Muslim culture is familiar to Americans whereas the Buddhist culture in Vietnam was not.

Anderson said that questions arising about the Persian Gulf War, however, are the same questions that arose in the Vietnam War.

"What are the war aims? 'What is patriotism?' and 'Does it mean if you do not support the commander-in-chief you do not support the troops?' are some of the questions still being asked, Anderson said.

Sayed El-Sayed, a professor of oceanography, said he believes the United States' actions in the Middle East is an example of colonialism revisited. El-Sayed, born and raised in Egypt, became a naturalized U.S. citizen and has been teaching at A&M since 1961.

He said Arab countries have suffered at the hands of the British, the French and now the United States. He said Bush had an opportunity to put some semblance of order in the Middle East, but instead chose to wage war.

"The greatest tragedy of American foreign policy is that we never tried to adopt democratic policies in the Arab world," El-Sayed said.

He said he has nothing good to say about Saddam Hussein, but he believes the war in the gulf is essentially an Arab problem not to be solved by outsiders, including the United States.

Another speaker, Floyd Wells, Commander of the local Disabled Veterans of America, said he believes no one really knows why the United States is fighting in the Middle East, but it is going to require "grassroots" organization to acquire and preserve peace.

Former war correspondent says censorship efforts may backfire

By JULIE MYERS

Efforts to censor the Persian Gulf conflict and divorce Americans from the realities of war likely will backfire, resulting in a backlash of war protest, says a former Vietnam war correspondent.

"The ability to wage war has always depended on the public not understanding the (emotional) implications of war," says Dr. Charles Self, head of Texas A&M's Department of Journalism.

People die during wartime and television delivered this reality to the doorsteps of Americans during the Vietnam war.

Support for the Vietnam conflict eroded when bloody images on television combined with the lack of a widely accepted justification for war, Self says.

After viewing casualties on television, rational reasons did not seem valid, only the emotional aspects of war were obvious, Self says.

"Soldiers who have been in wars are those most anxious to avoid war because they do understand the implications," Self says.

Self worked as a reporter for several newspapers, United Press International and as a correspondent for the Pacific edition of the Stars and Stripes during the Vietnam conflict.

Self has spent most of the last 20 years at the University of Alabama as a journalism educator and re-

Conference highlights Hispanics

By BRIDGET HARROW
Of The Battalion Staff

Prominent Hispanics from across the state and nation, including the former U.S. Secretary of Education, will highlight a two-day lecture series this weekend at Texas A&M.

"Hispanics ... Success in the '90s" is the theme of the series sponsored by the MSC Committee for the Awareness of Mexican American Culture (CAMAC).

Speakers at the annual conference will discuss topics of interest to Hispanics, says Georgette Lopez-Aguado, CAMAC president.

"We are in a new decade — 1990s," Lopez-Aguado says. "Hispanics are the fastest-growing minority group, especially in this state."

Lopez-Aguado says CAMAC members wanted speakers to cover six areas of interests to Hispanics: business, higher education, law, media, medicine and politics.

Guest speakers for the conference will include:

- Elma Barrera, a newscaster for KTRK-TV in Houston.
- Domingo Cabrera, A&M staff physician.
- Norma Cantu, regional counsel for the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MAL-DEF).
- Carlos Montemayor, chief executive officer for Montemayor Y Asociados in San Antonio.
- Alvaro Pereira, executive director for the Republican National Hispanic Assembly in Washington, D.C.
- Linda Rodriguez, president of the Texas Association of Chicanos in Higher Education.

Inmate acquitted Prisoner escapes death penalty, remains jailed on former charge

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — An inmate sentenced to death for killing a fellow prisoner in Texas prison gang violence had his death sentence thrown out Wednesday by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, which also ordered an acquittal in the case.

"It's no surprise," inmate Tony Rice, 33, said after learning of the appeals court decision. "Naturally, it would be ironic to say I'm not relieved. It was just a question of when it would come. It's a nice way for my family to start the decade."

Rice was one of four inmates on death row for gang-related slayings. In winning the capital murder convictions, Special Texas Department of Corrections Prosecutor David Weeks alleged they committed murders for paybacks that gang leaders offered in several ways, including advancement, protection and personal favors.

But Rice contended, and the Court of Criminal Appeals agreed, that evidence presented by Weeks was insufficient to show Rice would be in line for a reward from a gang known as the "Texas Mafia" if he killed fellow gang member David "Rope" Robidoux.

"There was no evidence presented that a specific promise existed between appellant (Rice) and the 'Texas Mafia,'" the opinion written by Judge Morris Overstreet, stated. "That is, there was no agreement, even an implicit one, that the appellant would receive compensation or a greater share of the gang's profits for specifically killing Robidoux."

The prosecutor was infuriated.

"This is appalling, just absolutely appalling," Weeks said. "That is not justice. It's not the way the law is supposed to work."

"To think that a case done as brutally as this one — that he's going to walk — just shocks my conscience. We will certainly file a motion for rehearing and take every step we can to see that this is reversed or at the very least, that he can be tried for the lesser offense. My understanding of the opinion is that there is no question that he committed the murder. I'm just sick."

Robidoux was suspected by gang members at the Eastham Unit of being an informer and died Dec. 16, 1984 of 28 stab wounds from a knife made from a brass rod used in a toilet. Rice was charged with the slaying, convicted and sentenced to death.

"If you tell me I'm guilty of allegedly murdering this individual for remuneration or the promise of remuneration and you don't tell me who the remuneration came from, then how am I supposed to know or even prepare a defense against that kind of allegation," Rice said. "That's impossible."

Rice, who already was serving 99 years for murder plus 15 years for burglary, said despite Wednesday's ruling, it's likely he never will be free.

But he expressed disappointment the case ever went to trial and blamed Weeks, who was elected Walker County district attorney last year after campaigning that he brought people like Rice to justice.
