the Saturday matches were played against UTSA.

"UTSA may be outmanned, but you can't take anything for granted," Kent said. "They have some talent on their team and they will be ready to play. It should be a good tennis match."

It was indeed a good tennis match ... for Aggie fans, that is.

The Aggies completed a weekend sweep by manhandling UTSA 7-1 behind solid play from Matt Zisette, who had a rough Friday.

Zisette rebounded from his Friday loss with a victory over an old nemesis, UTSA's Roland Cuellar, 6-2, 6-4.

The Ags other senior player, Kennedy, suffered the only setback of the day, succumbing 5-7, 6-4, 4-6, to Giovanni Casanova.

The best performance of the day definitely belonged to Phillips, who manhandled UTSA's Jon Hernandez, 6-0, 6-1.

"Scott Phillips is just playing excellent tennis," Kent said. "He's rolling through on his shots and simply overpowering his opponents. He's going to be a good one for us for years to come."

"Matt Zisette also played well today and got a win over Cuellar, who had given him trouble in the past."

Brown dominated his opponent again, beating UTSA's Ryan Reber, 6-4, 6-0.

Johnson also scored a victory after a tough first set, 7-6, 6-1, over Erik Baar, while Weaver struggled early as well, eventually winning over Tim Schmuetscher, 7-6, 6-4.

In doubles play, the Aggies won both of their court matches, highlighted by the Zisette/Johnson team beating Schmuetscher and Reber, 7-5, 6-0.

Also scoring a victory were Weaver and Phillips, 6-2, 6-4, over Cuellar and Hernandez.

Astros face future

HOUSTON (AP) — Astros pitcher Mike Scott, a highly touted trade prospect through most of last season, is one of the few Houston pitching veterans returning for the 1991 season.

And while the former Cy Young Award winner feels confident with his repaired right shoulder, he says he has mixed sentiments about the year ahead.

"Houston has been great," Scott said from his home in Laguna Niguel, Calif. "I think it's the best place to play, other than maybe Anaheim. I've had a great run there, but I also want to get that World Series ring. You've got to be honest. We're rebuilding."

Scott, 35, is one of the few players left from a nucleus of experienced performers who carried the Astros through much of the 1980s. He won the Cy Young Award in 1986 and helped the Astros win the National League West that year. Now the team's prospects remain uncertain.

"I don't know what their plans are," Scott said of the Houston management. "First I have to prove I'm healthy, and I don't think that'll be a problem."

Scott struggled with a shoulder injury during the 1990 season and was able to correct a stride flaw to finish the year at 9-13 with a 3.81 ERA, up from a 2-6 and a 5.53 ERA by early June.

Scott had arthroscopic surgery on his shoulder Dec. 11. He has been rehabilitating it, working with free weights since then.

He hasn't tried pitching. In fact, he was asked not to throw until spring training begins Feb. 22 in Kissimmee, Fla.

"I don't throw until I get to spring training anyway, so it (the injury) isn't holding me back as far as that's concerned," he told The Houston Post.

But Scott already has heard the rumors that he still could be traded if his arm is whole and he displays his characteristic effectiveness.

He has remained neutral about his feelings on the loss of other veteran teammates — Dave Smith, Danny Darwin, Terry Puhl, Glenn Davis, Juan Agosto — who left the team through free agency, release or trade.

"They were good friends," Scott said. "You can't just blow it off and say, 'That's just baseball.'" But as a professional move, Scott would say only that "we have nothing to show for it."

"That's (management's) decision to make," Scott said. "I didn't think the last three or four years we were that far away (from winning a division title)."

Scott doesn't discount the possibility that the Astros could be contenders in the future.

"Oakland was awful a few years before they started winning," Scott said. "The next couple of years is going to be a little bit of a struggle."

The trend of cutting loose high-priced veterans started in the 1988 offseason when the Astros let Nolan Ryan go.

He later signed a contract with the Texas Rangers and collected his 5,000th strikeout and his 300th win.

Ryan will pitch for the Rangers again this year.
