Recession

report glossed over major problems facing the economy, including a rash of bank failures and a chronic federal budget deficit projected to hit an all-time high of $318 billion this year.

Michael Boskin, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisors, was questioned sharply by members of the congressional Joint Economic Committee over whether the administration was not making a major policy error by failing to offer proposals to deal with the recession.

"My concern is that I see factors of weakness that were not present in past recessions," said Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md. and chairman of the committee. "If the recession is deeper, will the administration do anything?"

Boskin said the administration was involved in contingency planning but repeated administration opposition to such Democratic proposals as job-creating public works programs or cuts in the Social Security payroll tax.

Boskin said one major drag on the economy, higher oil prices, had already moderated significantly. He said this, along with lower interest rates being engineered by the Federal Reserve, should help speed a recovery.

The president's economic report said that even before Iraq's invasion sent oil prices soaring the United States was enduring weak growth, which the report blamed on a worldwide increase in interest rates, stricter lending practices by banks and tight-money policies pursued by the Fed to fight inflation.

The overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, fell at annual rate of 2.1 percent in the October-December quarter. The economic report forecast it would fall further in the current, January-March period before starting to grow again.

Transit killing prompts boost in bus security

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Security may be increased at a shuttle bus stop following the stabbing death of a man who was involved in a confrontation over a cowboy hat, transit officials said.

Joseph Anthony Cieliencki, 20, was fatally stabbed at a shuttle bus park-and-ride station after leaving the San Antonio Stock Show and Rodeo with his father aboard a VIA Metropolitan Transit bus, police said.

The attack occurred after two men taunted Cieliencki's father on the bus about his brown cowboy hat, officials said.

Alfred Cieliencki, 57, the father, survived the attack, but was severely beaten about his face. His son was pronounced dead early Monday at Brooke Army Medical Center.

There were no immediate arrests. VIA spokeswoman Suzanne Detwiler said security at the mall's park-and-ride depot may be increased.

"This was the last bus of the evening at about 11:30 p.m. (Sunday), and the supervisors who would have been on hand were gone by that time," Detwiler said.

She said bus riders should notify their driver immediately if there is trouble.

"We are just trying to tell our patrons that it's still very safe to ride the bus. Our operators are trained to notice anything suspicious, and they will call in and get a uniformed police officer to meet them in a very few minutes," Detwiler said.

Police said the father and son had just stepped off a bus at a park-and-ride station near Windsor Park Mall when they were accosted by two men who had harassed them on the bus about Alfred Cieliencki's cowboy hat.

Alfred Cieliencki described the men as "rowdies on the bus."
