Richards lobbies lawmakers Governor wants voters to decide lottery issue

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards personally lobbied lawmakers for a lottery bill Wednesday, saying Texans want a chance to vote on the games of chance.

Testifying to a Senate committee, Richards said she favors the lottery bill for two reasons: voters have a right to speak on the issue, and the state needs the money a lottery could raise.

"Everywhere I went in the 2½ years I campaigned for this office, the consistent thread I heard everywhere was, 'When are you going to let us vote on lottery?'" Richards told lawmakers.

Gov. Ann Richards

"Education was important, economic development was important, but across the board — in every community and every walk of life — people want to know why don't you let us have a lottery."

Richards' testimony to the Senate State Affairs Committee was her second appearance before a legislative panel since taking office last month. She also testified on the need to reform government ethics laws.

She said the $731 million that a lottery is estimated to generate in 1992-93 would help lawmakers cope with a $4.6 billion projected deficit.

"In January of next year, you are going to be in need of money," she said. "And I know of no other money source — no other money source — that can bring money to general revenue as rapidly as a lottery can."

But opponents argued that state government shouldn't resort to gambling to solve its budget woes. Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock has called it a "sleazy" way for the state to raise funds.

"The state becomes a kind of carnival barker, trying to get as many people as possible to come in and lose their money," said Phil Strickland, director of the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission.

Strickland said a lottery would prey on the poor by consuming a greater portion of their household incomes.

"A state income tax clearly is not as regressive as either a sales tax increase or a lottery, he told lawmakers.

He also said a lottery teaches the wrong lessons. "You are at the point of another massive contradiction," he said. "Calling for government ethics and a lottery in the same breath is somehow out of tune."

"The lottery cannot emphasize the truth and survive. The state knows that they are going to lose, at least about 99 percent of them. That becomes its job, to create as many losers as it possibly can," he said.

Lawmakers are considering a proposed constitutional amendment to create a lottery. That plan needs approval by two-thirds of the House and Senate, then ratification by voters.

The Senate in past sessions has approved a lottery bill, but it died in the more conservative House. House opponents claim they have more than the 51 votes needed to block its passage this time.

Police inform public of prostitute slayings

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities Wednesday went public with information on the "deliberate mutilation" and slayings of two prostitutes because they fear they're dealing with a killer who could strike again.

"Our hope is that it doesn't (happen)," Dallas police homicide Lt. Ron Waldrop said. "But we recognized that we didn't have any leads that would lead to an arrest, so we wanted to make people in those areas and operating in the same circumstances aware that there is the potential for problem."

Authorities searched for a third prostitute who police say knew and worked out of a motel just southwest of downtown Dallas with the two victims. The woman, known only as Vickie, has not been seen since early January, police said, leading them to fear she also was slain.

The victims were identified as Mary Lou Pratt, 33, whose body was found Dec. 13, and Susan Petersen, 27, whose body was found Feb. 10, authorities said.

The bodies of the women, whose faces had been similarly mutilated, were found in the same area in rural southern Dallas.

Both victims had been shot in the head, and Petersen also was shot in the stomach and chest, Dallas police homicide Detective John Westphalen said.

Court bars strict limitations on paternal inheritance claims

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court has held that a strict limitation barring illegitimate children from asserting claims to paternal inheritance is unconstitutional.

The 9-0 decision was issued Wednesday in a Lee County case in which a woman filed a will contest some 55 years after she claimed she was born out of wedlock in 1932. She asserted a right to paternal inheritance.

The trial court concluded that her suit was barred by the four-year general statute of limitations, and the 3rd Court of Appeals at Austin affirmed that judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the appeals court and remanded the case to the trial court.

Justice Oscar Mauzy said the Texas Family Code, as enacted in 1977, provided that an illegitimate child could bring a paternity action in court only before the child was 1 year old, or the suit was barred.

At that time, the woman was already 42 years old. Subsequent amendments boosted the age to limit to four years and finally to 20 years. "Obviously, neither of those amendments were of any help to petitioner," Mauzy's opinion said.

"Because of the strict limitation periods ... petitioner never had the opportunity to institute an action to determine" whether the man was her father, Mauzy wrote.

"Consequently, petitioner is statutorily barred from asserting any claim to paternal inheritance," the court said. "Petitioner contends that such bar unjustifiably discriminates against illegitimates, and therefore violates her right to equal protection by the laws. We agree."
