Ex-Bear coach faces lawsuit

WACO, Texas (AP) - Former Baylor University basketball coach Jim Haller left a snowstorm in Cleveland on Thursday "only to come home to a bigger one." Haller and the bank he now works for were named in a $3 million lawsuit that one of Haller's former players filed Wednesday in a Waco state district court.

The former player, John Wheeler, now 25, of Dallas is the same one whose secret recording of a conversation he had with Haller during the 1984-85 season led to Haller's resignation and Baylor's sus-pension for 2 years for recruiting violations.

"It's a total surprise to me, after six years, that something like this could come up," Haller told The As-sociated Press on Thursday. "From what I know of it, it's a total fabrication.'

Wheeler's lawsuit accuses Haller and MBank of fraudulently getting him to sign a promissory note for a new car in 1985.

Wheeler admitted in the lawsuit that he signed the $13,018 note for the 1982 Chevrolet Camaro Z28. But Wheeler said Haller told him that his playing for the university would be accepted as payment for the automobile.

Haller told him the car would be paid for by an undisclosed third party, the lawsuit alleges.

"I have not seen the lawsuit, but this is a total fabrication," Haller repeated.

Wheeler's lawsuit this week is in part a response to a suit that MBank filed last April against Wheeler to recoup the cost of the car. The MBank suit seeks $16,401.39 for the cost of the car plus fees and interest.

The bank alleged in its suit that Wheeler signed the promissory notes but did not make the pay-
