War

they're inflicting casualties." At the command's daily news briefing in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, the Marine general reported that partly cloudy weather Monday cut into the number of Desert Storm air sorties, reducing them to 2,400 in 24 hours. Almost 1,000 missions were flown against the Republican Guard and other Iraqi units in Kuwait and southern Iraq, where air strikes are "softening up" the dug-in defenses in advance of a U.S.-led ground assault. A recent change in air tactics was giving American warplanes greater success against Iraqi armor and other targets, a U.S. military source said. "We're not experiencing too many misses," the source said, without elaborating on the new techniques. "We're really having a field day taking out his tanks and artillery." The lost plane was an Air Force F-16 fighter whose pilot bailed out 40 miles inside Iraqi-held territory, Neal said. The spokesman did not specify whether the plane went down in Iraq or Kuwait, and said it was not immediately known whether the jet was shot down or had a mechanical problem. Air Force helicopters, protected by warplanes, made a dash into "Indian country," and lifted the airman out the desert, Neal said. "They did a superb job and there was one happy camper of a pilot." Monday's marine-mine explosions, the first time U.S. vessels have struck Iraqi mines in the war, came as dozens of warships crowded farther north in the gulf in preparation for a possible U.S. Marine amphibious landing. A news-pool dispatch from the USS Tripoli said sleeping crewmen were jarred awake by a mine blast at 4:30 a.m. as the helicopter assault ship led a minesweeping operation off the Kuwaiti coast. The explosion ripped a 16-by-20-foot hole in the forward starboard hull, 10 feet below the waterline, and flooded several compartments, the report said. About three hours later, the USS

Princeton, a 1-year-old, $1 billion Aegis missile cruiser struck another mine about 10 miles away, Neal reported. Because that blast damaged one of the Princeton's propeller screws, the technology-laden ship was operating at 50-percent power, Neal said. Four sailors on the Tripoli and three on the Princeton were slightly injured, Neal said. He said both ships remained "fully mission capable." The pool report said the Tripoli sat dead in the water after the explosion, while work crews struggled to shore up the hole and pump out compartments on three decks. The Tripoli normally carries up to 2,000 combat-ready Marines, but military officials indicated it might not have had a full complement on board. On the ground, the close-quarters skirmishing of the weekend died down. But U.S. artillery fire and attack helicopters kept the Iraqis off balance along the front lines, the U.S. command reported.

the proposal, they say. "Students have never come up to administrators with both a need and a solution," Taffinder says. If the proposal is signed by Mobley, it will be presented to the Texas A&M University System Board of Regents in May, he says. If approved by the board, the project will be put on a priority building list by planning and facilities, Muñoz says. "The center would be moved up to three from 76 on the list," he adds. Taffinder says the center would provide a relaxing atmosphere for students. "We want to make it welcoming and comfortable to the students."

goes on, it does," Duncan says. "This is an avenue where they can voice their frustrations." "They are going to go on despite the racism, but they need to learn how to deal with things in their own ways, so they don't let the pettiness of racism keep them from achieving their academic goal," she says. It also is good to connect with your own culture because it raises your self-esteem, she says. "They need some positive role models and people they can relate to, to give them more motivation," Duncan says. She says people need to release tension and relax after a stress-filled day and the support groups offer that time. Male-female relationships are another topic of frequent discussion at the meetings. Duncan says she has received a lot of feedback, especially from women. Some of the women were thinking about dropping out of school, but then decided to stay because of the help, she says. "With each individual there is a uniqueness and you never know what the impact is you are going to have on any individual," she says. But Duncan says her goal is like a preacher's goal — if she helps one person out of 50, then the job is worth the effort. "We engage in a kind of talk that is culturally unique to the black females and males," she says. "Anything on their minds related to either roommate conflicts, family issues, racial tension or conflicts and other problems they would like to talk about." The Student Counseling Service also has a minority student walk-in program for students with no appointment. The service is available for black students from 1 to 5 p.m. on Tuesdays and for Hispanic students from 1 to 5 p.m. Thursdays. For more information about these programs or the Student Counseling Service, call 845-1557 or go to 300 YMCA.
