Senate passes school finance amendment

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate passed a proposed constitutional amendment Tuesday that would allow the state to take local property tax revenue from wealthy school districts and spend it in poor ones.

A school finance reform bill detailing how the money would be redistributed was not immediately considered by the Senate. The sponsor, Sen. Carl Parker, said he planned to bring it up Wednesday.

Senators also passed a second proposed constitutional amendment to eliminate the requirement that some state money be sent to Texas school districts on a per-pupil basis, regardless of their wealth.

That money could be redistributed within the system, taking $44 million away from the 75 wealthiest districts in 1992.

Both proposed constitutional amendments, passed 22-6, are in response to a Texas Supreme Court order to equitably fund poor school districts.

Board postpones dress code decision

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some students and parents are criticizing Boerne School District board members for voting to delay action on a request to relax the district's hair-length rule for boys.

A crowded room of 100 people, half of them students, issued a collective moan and several yelled "cop-out" when the board voted 5-1 Monday to wait for legislative action before deciding the matter.

Trustee Pamela Plunkett was the only board member voting against the action, taken before Boerne High School juniors Will Suttle and Paul Mann were allowed to present their case for a dress-code change.
