Eastern Bloc dissolves Warsaw Pact

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Warsaw Pact effectively went out of business Monday, ending a 35-year confrontation with NATO that divided Europe between the two alliances and created history's costliest arms race.

Defense and foreign ministers of Warsaw Pact members formally dissolved the Eastern Bloc alliance's military functions in a 20-minute ceremony at a luxury Western hotel on the Danube River.

Countries signing the agreement — the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania — agreed to meet in Prague by July 1 to disband the alliance's remaining structures.

A meeting planned later this week in Budapest to disband Comecon, the Soviet-led equivalent of the European Common Market, was postponed indefinitely.

Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh and Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov of the Soviet Union looked glum as they put their names to the document ending the alliance Moscow forged in 1955 as a counterweight to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

By contrast, Jiri Dienstbier and Lubos Dobrovsky of Czechoslovakia smiled broadly. Both men, foreign and defense minister respectively, are former dissidents who fought the orthodox Communist regime imposed by a Warsaw Pact invasion that ended the liberal "Prague Spring" of 1968.

"The military bloc system as such has come to an end today," Foreign Minister Geza Jeszensky of Hungary told reporters after the ceremony.

Poland's foreign minister, Krzysztof Skubiszewski, said: "When you deprive the Warsaw Treaty of its military essence, it becomes more or less an empty shell."

The documents signed Monday provide that the Soviet-dominated military command will be disbanded by March 31 and six secret agreements that bound Eastern Europe to Moscow will be annulled.

Dienstbier and Jeszensky of Czechoslovakia indicated the Warsaw Pact's other functions would be abolished by the end of the year.

Disagreements between the Soviets and their former East European satellites remained beneath the surface. The Soviets did not appear at a news conference after the meeting and Hungarian officials said they may already have left Budapest.

Soviet officials were reluctant to comment on the meeting. Their absence from the news conference suggested Moscow wanted the Warsaw Pact to die quietly. The Soviets also insisted that the agreements annulled Monday remain secret.

Dienstbier said the annulled documents were essentially uninteresting and that the continued secrecy showed the Soviets had not discarded old ways.

In a veiled dig at Soviet conservatives, Jeszensky noted in the closed meeting that "even at present, opinions emerge according to which the Warsaw Treaty is part of stability and military balance in Europe," according to remarks made available to reporters.

"More numerous are those, however, who characterize it as an organization resting on mistaken foundations which has outlived itself," he added.
