ight timers and set them to go off at different times during the day. There also are several precautions to take when traveling on the road. Cpl. Betty LeMay, also with the UPD Crime Prevention Unit, offers several suggestions for safe travel.

She says students should travel with friends if possible. They also should alert someone of their time of departure and expected arrival. Students also should have enough gasoline and money to get to and from their destination. They should keep their cars in good condition to avoid breakdowns. She says to check battery cables, belts, tires, oil and radiator at least once a month. LeMay suggests taking an emer-

'send aid" signs and a pencil and paper to write a phone number on.

If the car does break down, Le-May says to tie a white cloth to the door handle or radio antenna, raise gency kit with flares, a tire repair kit, the hood and then stay in the car with the doors locked. When someone stops to help, ask them to phone police.

If students see another motorist in trouble, LeMay says they should signal that they will get help and then call the Texas Department of Public Safety or a local police station.

Gender

the language don't matter since "wo-mankind" is not acceptable. "Gender exclusive language is harmful to everyone, but particularly to women," she said. Shakeshaft said part of the problem is many educators do not realize they are treating students in a biased "I don't know anybody who wants with the to hurt women or hold them back;" she said. "I don't know white people who want to hurt people of color.

But I often see people that do hurt others. She said the way bias injects itself is usually not dramatic, but can be seen by collecting data and analyzing She said there is overwhelming evidence that sexism exists, including the following:

• In first grade, girls do better than boys. By the time they are seniors, boys are ahead;

• Sexual, physical and verbal abuse of women in schools is drastically higher than men;

• Derogatory language used in junior high and high schools is often gender-based and derogatory to-

• Men are shown more attention throughout all levels of education. Males are rewarded for speaking in class, but females are reprimanded for doing so;

• Teaching and tests are oriented toward concepts with which men are traditionally familiar. For instance, word problems in math may be couched in terms of sports;

• Characters in children's books portray girls and boys at odds;

• The structure of curriculum is based on the development process of men, not women; • Remedial courses are planned by subjects men need help in; Aspirations of women change as they get older because of society's emphasis on having and maintaining

• Studies show the best college atmosphere for women is a single-sex school and the best for men is a coeducational school. She said the reason for this is women do not have to compete for attention from teachers at single-sex schools: • Women see men in leadership roles and as role models; • Men view female life as a world of deprivation whereas women view male life as a world of opportunity. Shakeshaft said it might not seem obvious that people inject bias and ing "Good morning boys and girls." But if people said, "Good morning blacks and whites or good morning Jews and gentiles," she said there would be a problem.

Although people might be unintentionally sexist or racist, they can change if they are presented with the information in a non-threatening way, she said.
"Although it's bleak, schools can change if they want to take the time to make some of the changes," she Shakeshaft earned a master's and doctorate at A&M in educational administration and has been a professor at Hofstra University in New York since 1979.

She received the outstanding alumna award at the College of Edudivide along gender lines when saycation's 20th anniversary in 1989.
