Celebrations honor holiday

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Protestant and Roman Catholic leaders joined for an ecumenical service in St. Patrick's Cathedral while 6,000 Dubliners paraded in the streets to mark the saint's day Sunday.

About a thousand people, including President Mary Robinson, packed St. Patrick's for the service, marking the first time the governing bodies of the city's Protestant and Roman Catholic cathedrals had joined together.

The day also marked the start of the 800th anniversary celebration for the cathedral, built near a well where St. Patrick, who was chiefly responsible for converting the Irish to Christianity, supposedly baptized converts in the fifth century.

"Leaders of church and state, men and women from all parts of our island home, have gathered to give thanks to God for 800 years of worship and witness in St. Patrick's Cathedral, one of the most famous buildings in Dublin and the object of affection and respect of many traditions," said the Most Rev. Robin Eames, archbishop of Armagh and primate of the Anglican Church of Ireland.

St. Patrick's, which belongs to the Church of Ireland, was the site of Ireland's first university, founded in 1320. Satirist Jonathan Swift was the cathedral's dean from 1713 to 1745.

The present dean, the Rev.

Victor Griffin, said the cathedral was symbolic of Ireland's different religious and political traditions.

Prime Minister Charles Haughey reviewed the annual St. Patrick's Day parade, which attracted about 350,000 spectators.

The parade had more than 6,000 participants, 100 floats and 29 overseas bands and groups.

There were also parades in Cork, Limerick and Galway and many smaller towns.

lightly.

"This is not something we decided to do overnight," Robertson said. "Our news editors worked for weeks, laying out new styles, pasting up old issues to compare new versions with the old, and finding out which style was easier to read."

Sartin, a senior political science major from Sulphur Springs, said The Battalion's biggest drawback is that the editors change every semester and they each have their own style ideas.

"We're using this change to work up a guide book for future use," Sartin said. "Editors after this semester now will have a good model for the newspaper's design."

Study says Texas heads list in alleged police brutality

DALLAS (AP) — More Texas law enforcement officers have been investigated and prosecuted for alleged brutality than officers in any other state, a new study says.

A copyrighted story in The Dallas Morning News on Sunday said that Texas, the nation's third most populous state, had 2,015 investigations of alleged police brutality between 1984 and 1989.

Second on the list was California with 1,294 investigations, followed by Louisiana with 1,050. Vermont was last, recording just three investigations during the five-year span.

The newspaper cited figures from records obtained from the U.S. Justice Department under the Freedom of Information Act.

Records also showed that 50 cases, involving about 125 officers accused of civil rights violations, were prosecuted in the state between 1980 and 1989. Texas cases accounted for 19.2 percent of the total civil rights cases filed against police nationwide.

The next highest was Louisiana, with 21 civil rights cases, or 8 percent.

Records obtained by the newspaper didn't include a state-by-state breakdown of convictions.

Professor's death mourned

"We lost a good friend and a good professor," Miller said. "It will be tough to fill his shoes."

The fishermen ended a seven-week search for the professor, which took more than 1,000 man-hours. The officers involved in the search dragged several miles of the river, used specially trained dogs and searched by boat, plane, helicopter and on foot.

The effort was hampered by the temperature, heavy rains, the speed of the river and the murky water.

The memorial will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at Grace Bible Church in College Station. Sharpe was cremated last week.
