SSC neighbors: Vacant houses attract crime

DALLAS (AP) — The superconducting super collider is almost a decade away from completion, but already is causing headaches for some residents of Ellis County.

Many of 50 houses purchased so far by the Texas National Research Commission to make room for the atom smasher's 54-mile underground ring stand vandalized, to neighbors' chagrin.

"We used to live in a fine neighborhood," Perry Giles said. "People had pride in it. Now it's turned into Beirut. It's all bombed-out looking."

Giles and others say the government should just tear down the houses instead of letting them stand, vacant and often torn up by vandals.
