

Rule would require analysis of health care

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed rule calling for cost-benefit analysis of new types of medical care for the elderly could put additional burdens on Medicare recipients, critics said Sunday.

"I find it a little paradoxical that a program designed to protect senior citizens against cost now may be stepping back from its public obligations to protect them just because something may be too expensive," Gordon B. Schatz, a lawyer who specializes in health-care issues, said Sunday.

The rule, which is awaiting adoption, would require the federal government for the first time to compare costs and benefits of specific types of care in deciding whether to pay for them.

Horace B. Deets, a top official of the American Association of Retired Persons, said he wasn't familiar with the rule but worried that it, like other proposals to deal with health costs, would merely "shift the cost perhaps from the government to individuals."

DALLAS (AP) — Police officers who are disciplined for abuse or misconduct have their punishments overturned most of the time through civil service appeals, a report says.

A review of 246 cases in five Texas cities found that 61 percent of officers who appealed their punishment were reinstated or received lesser penalties, the Dallas Morning News reported Sunday in a copy-righted story.

Officers say civil service appeals protect them from loose or random punishment. But some city officials and police chiefs say the appeal system threatens their ability to exercise discipline within their own ranks.

Residents voice concern over A&M housing

Smith said the residents will continue to call and write University and state officials, as well as try to publicize the issue in the College Station community.

Some residents voiced concerns about being forced to quit school because they won't have enough money for classes and a possible rent increase.

Eric Truax, graduate student and student worker at A&M, says he will have to quit school if he is faced with a rent increase.

"I thought I could live and afford to go to school here," he said. "Now I don't know if I can stay in school at all."

Truax said there are other people in the same situation and people on a low income can't afford to move.

Truax said he doesn't know if the possible destruction of the duplexes is the reason for rent increases in the community, but the rent increases are everybody's problem, so everybody should be concerned.

"The University has only done minimal maintenance on the outside (of the duplexes)," he said. "The inside of most of them is nice and very livable."

A survey taken by one of the residents in the duplex showed that 85 percent of the residents were against destruction of the duplexes. The survey also found that 63 students and 50 or more children would have to be relocated.

Another graduate student, who wished to remain anonymous, said a University statement that there is plenty of housing available for the residents is untrue.

"There are waiting lists for people who are waiting for housing in this area," she said. "How can they say there's plenty available?"

University officials have taken the decision lightly, she said, and they don't realize there are families with children being forced to relocate.

"Even if they want to get out of the housing business, they can't just throw out families," she said.

If the University has checked to make sure there is plenty of housing available for the residents, she said residents haven't seen the results. She said the duplexes are convenient because they are close to campus and are expensive.

"Of course we may be able to find housing that's more expensive," she said. "But some people won't allow families or pets to live there."

Donald Powell, in a previous interview, said the University is aware of the resident's concerns and is working to minimize problems.

"Setting the demolition for August would correspond with the University's fiscal calendar and would allow the tenants months to relocate," he said. "No one's going to be turned out on the street."

Smith said, "This problem isn't going to go away, and we plan to do something about it."
