

Chancellorship challenged

 of Regents. Stout was not available for comment Monday.
 Hugill said he thinks Stout was referring to an earlier Board, and said he believes the present Board will listen to faculty input.
 "I would say we believe the current Board is open to the faculty in the process of choosing a chancellor," Hugill said.
 Schwarzkopf, 56, returned to the United States on Sunday.

A 32-year Army veteran, Schwarzkopf graduated 43rd in a class of 480 from the U.S. Military Academy in West Point, N.Y.

A&M chancellors earn $66,186 a year, as set by the state. Chancellors also receive a house in the Bryan-College Station area with utilities paid.

A chancellor's income usually is supplemented by substantial private sources.

Guest lecturer examines literary reform views

 said. Works of minorities, women and others, for example, are then reconsidered in a non-discriminatory environment.

As elements of this theory develop, the tendency to include everything prevents selective omission, which often happens when literary study is redefined, Broadhead said.

Although this study appears unbiased, the exclusion of some literature is inherent.

"The new formation must deny attention to some things in order to pay attention to new things," he said.

"The amount of time you have in a semester to teach doesn't increase with the amount of material you have to teach," Broadhead said.

This fact is responsible for the parallel between modern, inclusive literary criticism, and the more exclusive criticism from the 19th and early 20th centuries, he said. The works, which are studied, are reflective of the values placed upon them by the society.

"In the last ten years there has been so much interesting work done on domestic fiction of the middle 19th century, but at the same time that volume of intense criticism has been produced, it would be hard for me to name three interesting essays that have come out on Moby Dick," Broadhead said. "If these developments are related—the rise of one type of criticism and the decline of another—it would suggest we are losing one body of work as the price of reclaiming another."
