Board of higher education delays degree plans

 ting off the antibiotics and the IV fluids to make that patient well," Guerra said.
 Gaston said A&M will continue to seek approval because it will want to proceed at the earliest possible time.
 "Hopefully, the proposals will be approved without delay when the financial situation improves and the board can unfreeze its funds," Gaston said.
 If funding does not improve by July 1992, then previously approved degree programs put "on hold" would be brought back before the board for another review.

 "We need to do that because priorities can change," Reasoner said.
 Kenneth Ashworth, commissioner of higher education, conceded that the Board's action would "make some people and some schools unhappy," but he said it is an essential step toward trying to protect quality in higher education.
 "We cannot keep adding new programs, new services and new buildings on top of an educational foundation lacking adequate financial support," Ashworth said.

Gaston said two other non-substantive proposals for a master's of science in journalism and a doctorate in anthropology will be submitted shortly.
 The degrees are nonsubstantive because they can be approved at the HECB staff level instead of requiring approval from the board itself.
 Gaston said he does not know how the nonsubstantive proposals will fare with the staff, but remains optimistic. Funding for these requests is more readily accessible than that needed for new degree programs, he added.

All aspects of higher education are feeling the budget pinch.
 Ben Latham, chairman of the board's Campus Planning Committee, said Texas institutions already are half a billion dollars behind in needed maintenance.
 "These new buildings could translate into a demand for over $4 million in state funds each year to operate and maintain them," Latham said. "I believe that for us to continue to approve projects would be to cause even more harm to higher education through the further dilution of the limited funds we have."
