'Star Wars' mission

NASA counts down

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA began another countdown for the space shuttle Discovery on Thursday after replacing an engine sensor that failed during fueling for a launch attempt earlier this week.

Workers removed the sensor and its attached electrical cables Wednesday.

While inside the engine compartment, workers also repaired minor helium leaks in a plate between the orbiter and external fuel tank. Unusually high amounts of helium were detected in the compartment during fueling late Monday and early Tuesday, Sofge said. Helium, an inert gas, is used to purge the area.

Sofge said the leaks alone probably would not have delayed liftoff.

Tuesday liftoff when the sensor began showing impossibly high pressure readings for one of the three main engines.

Tests on the new sensor indicate it works well, NASA test director Al Sofge said.

"We're fairly certain it is the transducer (sensor) that was the problem," Sofge said. "We're very comfortable with that and looking forward to having no problem with that during the launch countdown."

Discovery is scheduled to lift off on a military mission devoted to "Star Wars" research at 6:01 a.m. CDT Sunday.

Pres. Salinas inaugurates subway system

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — President Carlos Salinas de Gortari on Thursday inaugurated Monterrey's metropolitan rail system and an international business center touted as Latin America's largest.

Salinas praised the northeast state of Nuevo Leon for its "tenacity and entrepreneurship" in developing the two projects and others, including a four-lane superhighway to Laredo, Texas, El Cuchillo dam and a border crossing at Colombia.

"The government of Mexico will continue to support continued development in Nuevo Leon," Salinas told a gathering of about 900 businessmen. "You deserve it."

The 11.5-mile metro line took three years to complete and cost $244 million. The cost was split equally by the state and federal governments.

The above-ground line runs from the Monterrey neighborhood of San Bernabe to the suburb of Guadalupe. The price per ride is equal to about 4 cents.

Bush faces weak economy, tries to avoid world recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration, confronted with further weakness in the U.S. economy, on Thursday pressed the case for reductions in American and foreign interest rates as a way of keeping the world out of a global recession.

The administration effort came as the Labor Department reported a big surge in the number of Americans filing unemployment claims. The National Bureau of Economic Research declared last July as the official start of the recession.

Speaking to reporters in the Oval Office, President Bush said, "We want to see these interest rates down a little bit, and I think that would be good for the world economy, including our own."

The president's call for lower interest rates came as the Labor Department issued a bleak jobless claims report, saying the number of new Americans seeking unemployment help rose 47,000 in the second week of April.

The sharp increase brought the number of first-time claimants back to the half-million mark and was viewed as especially disappointing to economists who had hoped to see a third straight week of declines in the jobless claims. Such a string would have been a clear signal the recession would soon be over.

Bush and his aides have repeatedly called for lower interest rates as a way to fight the recession, and in a series of moves last fall and early this winter, the Federal Reserve did drive interest rates lower to stimulate economic growth.

The Fed's easing efforts came to a halt in early March amid reports of a deep split inside the central bank over whether any further easing might trigger higher inflation once the recovery begins.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and other administration officials have insisted that the Fed is being overly concerned about inflation, and that the real problem was making sure the recession in the United States does not deepen and in turn drag the world economy into a downturn.

Bush's remarks about lower interest rates being good for the global economy were amplified later Thursday by Treasury Department officials who are preparing for a meeting Sunday with top finance officials from the world's seven largest industrial countries.
