Recycling prevails in paper industry

With the 21st anniversary of Earth Day come and gone, environmentally friendly products are still pretty scarce on store shelves — unless it's recycled paper you want. Paper is no problem.

Grocery stores all across the land sell recycled facial and bathroom tissue, recycled paper towels and recycled table napkins. Office supply stores invite you to file recycled-paper memos in recycled-paper file folders while feeding recycled paper into your copier and computer printer. We're doing just fine with paper, thank you. But it's difficult to find much else.

While retailers have been slow starters on the environmental front, catalogs devoted to green shopping have proliferated. For the best selection at competitive prices, shopping by mail is your best bet. But prices for virtually identical products vary all over the lot, and cutting through the hype to get to the cheapest price can be tough.

With missionary zeal, many aim to educate you as well as sell to you. Most practice what they preach; many mail-order companies contribute part of their profits or gross sales to environmental causes. Admirable though the intent is, letting that cloud your buying decisions can waste something else that's green — your cash.

Changing Times combed the environmental catalogs for the best prices on a market basket of environmentally friendly items.

Applicable shipping charges are included because they can make the final cost quite different from the catalog price. Shipping charges were computed as though you were buying only one item. However, these charges often cover more than one item because shipping is usually based on the total dollar amount spent.

Green catalogs, like any other kind, fill different niches.

Some specialize in, say, energy-related products while others are generalists offering a bit of this and a bit of that.

No company consistently has the best prices, but some of the specialists are often lowest. They include Energy Federation Inc. (800-876-0660) for a pair of small screw-on faucet aerators ($5.40), a screw-on faucet aerator with shut-off lever ($7.95) and a pair of toilet dams ($8.39); and the Energy Store (800-288-1938) for an 18-watt compact fluorescent bulb ($26.50), a pair of rechargeable nickel cadmium batteries and a solar AA nickel cadmium battery recharger ($13.50).

Jazz festival takes root in Finland

PORI, Finland (AP) — The seeds are 100 percent American in origin, but jazz — everything from Dixieland to progressive — has taken root in this seaside town in Southwest Finland.

Each July, Pori's citizens play host to one of the world's most famous jazz festivals. They rename one of their town's main streets "Jazz Street," open their hearts and homes to the players who make the music, and accommodate the fans who love to listen to it.

Jazz rocks the town around the clock, with performances and jam sessions scheduled from 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. on 24 stages in a dozen concert locations. About 60 bands, with some 450 musicians, and about 500 festival workers (including many volunteers) participate. Some of the concerts are free.

The 26th Pori Jazz Festival, July 13-21 this year, will attract the usual fine array of headliners — Clark Terry, Otis Rush, Billy Preston, Ornette Coleman, Gloria Gaynor, Jeff Beck and Oscar Brown, Jr., among others.

In past years, the festival has seen the likes of Dizzy Gillespie and Branford Marsalis, to name a few. Well-known European musicians also perform.

"We invite the jazz world to converge in Pori, and we love it," says festival director Jyrki Kangas, himself a bass player. "We present as wide a variety of jazz forms as possible — the old and the new, from blues to bee-bop — and create an ambience where players can jam with each other and where musicians and audience members can meet and feel they're part of the same marvelous, entertaining, exciting event."
