Yugoslavia

rington, one of Britain's most widely respected statesmen, as its chief mediator.

Dozens of 200 cease-fire observers were leaving Tuesday for Croatia.

The European Community agreed to convene an international peace conference on Yugoslavia on Saturday. It named former NATO Secretary-General Lord Carrington its chief mediator.

Carrington, one of Britain's most widely respected statesmen, negotiated the 1979 Lancaster Ac-ords that led to an end of the white minority Rhodesian government in what is now Zimbabwe.

"It is now imperative ... that the momentum of our efforts for a cease-fire be maintained," German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said in announcing the decision of the 12 EC foreign ministers meeting in the Netherlands.

Dozens of the 200 cease-fire observers who are to monitor the latest EC peace plan were leaving Tuesday for Croatia. The head of Yugoslavia's collective federal presidency, Stipe Mesic, went on television late Tuesday to appeal for peace and call on all groups to cease hostilities.

"The country is facing great trials and very grave risks," said Mesic, a Croat.

He said the presidency was asking the federal army to immediately appoint officers to oversee the cease-fire jointly with Croatian officials and representatives of Serb insurgents.

In Zagreb, the Croatian government said it was instructing its Defense Ministry to implement a cease-fire, ban the movement of its troops without prior notification and demobilize reserve units.

In the latest battle report, a Yugoslav army general said four soldiers had been killed since the cease-fire was accepted early Monday. Lt. Gen. Marko Negovanovic, assistant defense minister, said several civilians also died.

There were conflicting and unconfirmed reports of other casualties.

for their lack of experience, and it works out pretty good."

Wait says the campus emergency medical team was organized 10 years ago because of the high response time of the county ambulance service to on-campus situations.

"In 1980, the county was dividing its emergency service into an organization for each city," Wait says. "The students on the emergency care team at that time talked to the health center and through some donations were able to purchase an ambulance."

Wait says by 1982, the EMS began providing on-campus service 24 hours-a-day, seven days-a-week. The all-volunteer staff of 30 students operates two fully-equipped ambulances and are usually present at campus events where large crowds are expected.

Brian Haschke, a senior biomedical science major, has been involved with A&M's EMS for more than two years, and was certified as an EMT-paramedic two months ago after completing the required training classes at Scott and White Hospital in Temple.

"Right now I'm serving as the team's captain of apparatus," Haschke says. "That means that I'm in charge of all of the equipment and handle the administrative side of ordering supplies and equipment maintenance.

"I like this because I really feel like I'm doing something important, and I also like the interaction with the people we help."

In addition to answering an average of four to five calls a day, the EMS is also on standby at the Firemen's Training School, rodeos, and campus events such as concerts and graduation. Wait says the fall semester is usually a busy time for them because of events like bonfire, football games and yell practices.

"During football season we see a lot of alcohol-related injuries or alcohol overdose," Wait says. "A lot of times students will drink a lot at yell practice and then go to the game the next day while still partially dehydrated and get sick."

"We haven't had any deaths from that (alcohol overdose) on campus, but there have been some that were pretty close. If someone hadn't found them and called us, then I don't think they would be here today."

There is no charge for students who use the A&M emergency medical service, nor will faculty and staff be charged a fee, if they are under a workman's compensation plan.

If the victim is suffering from an injury or illness that the A. P.
