HERBERT PICKS THE WRONG DAY TO GO SNORKELING

Soviets

Baker responded that the decision to remove troops "will be very important in terms of public opinion in the United States."

President Bush has said the reducing Soviet aid to Cuba and cutting defense spending would make U.S. economic aid to the Soviets more likely.

The 11,000 figure Gorbachev gave was higher than estimates given by independent and government military analysts in the West. They put the total of Soviet troops in Cuba at between 6,800 and 7,700.

Recent U.S. government estimates indicate that Soviet economic aid to Cuba dropped from about $5 billion annually a few years ago to $3.5 billion now.

Officials at the Soviet Defense Ministry said Wednesday they could not clarify the discrepancy.

Soviet reformers, experts and commentators have been urging an end to all Soviet aid to Cuba. Foreign Minister Boris D. Pankov said last week it was time to re-examine ties with Cuba.

A Moscow correspondent for the official Cuban newspaper Granma, Pedro Prada, said the reductions would not include advisers. He didn't elaborate.

A day later, Gorbachev and Russian Federation President Boris Yeltsin echoed the view in a joint U.S. TV interview.

Baker said he and Gorbachev also talked quite a bit "about the importance of quickly developing a credible economic reform program for presentation to international financial agencies."

Castro, in power since his revolution toppled dictator Fulgencio Batista in 1959, has had close relations with Moscow since the abortive, U.S.-backed Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961.

he called the 'double whammy.' "The bad news is the tax increase," he said. "The good news is that the increase in tuition and fees was only a fraction of what State Comptroller John Sharp recommended."

"The plan would be expensive," he said. "But it would make graduate school significantly less expensive for the students. The impact would be great, especially for married students trying to support a family while they go to school."

A four dollar per semester hour increase will hit students Ogden said. Additional two percent increases would come succeeding year.

Ogden said he was sorry to report a substantial tax increase for Texans, but said he was happy the legislature was able to avoid what

"The increase is not insignificant," he said. "On the other hand, it's not what I would call 'student-killer' either."

Comptroller, and beginning state-wide mailing campaign Burnside said.

"I think all faculty members will support us," he said. "Why shouldn't they? They know their salaries are not keeping up with their peers in other states. They know their salaries aren't even keeping up with inflation."

He said the TFA chapter leader at Southwest Texas State University is scheduled to meet with the school's faculty senate, where TFA says $2.3 million is available in local accounts. The TFA's report says the funds could be put into faculty salaries, departmental budgets and the library without causing the university any unnecessary financial strain.

al rainfall measurements. Scientists can build the instruments cheaply and send them up on satellites where they will provide accurate information for around 15 years, Graves said.

Another discrepancy lies in the satellite pictures taken of weather systems, Graves said. Scientists call the 30-mile region observed by the satellite a "footprint." The satellite records one rainfall rate for the "footprint," however there may be many different ones present.

He said they may also be prone to work looking for indications of global warming by examining rainfall averages over a period of time.

"Because of the variability of rain rates within the footprint, you don't know what the actual rain rate is within that footprint," Graves said. "It could have been a variety of different rates. My research potentially finds out what is the most probable distribution of rain rates within that footprint."

Next, Graves plans to investigate correction factors for satellite carrying a variety of microwave radiometers set at different frequencies. He will also look into determining correction factors for other types of weather instruments used.

His findings will allow meteorologists to make long-term, glob-
