Johnson voted to All-Star team

West extends team to 13 to allow retired Magic to play

NEW YORK (AP) — Magic Johnson was voted to the Western Conference team for the NBA All-Star Game next month. Johnson, on the Los Angeles Lakers injured list since announcing he had contracted the virus that causes AIDS, had the second-highest vote total for guards when results were announced today.

Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls was the top vote-getter for the sixth year in a row and will head the Eastern Conference team.

NBA Commissioner David J. Stern said, "The fans have clearly expressed their desire to see Magic play in the All-Star Game again. We have consulted with league medical advisors and with Magic's doctors and have been assured that Magic's competing in the All-Star Game should not pose any health risk to Magic or the other participants."

Stern said the Western Conference team would include 13 players,

All-Star Starters

Western Conference

Clyde Drexler, Portland
 Magic Johnson, L.A. Lakers
 Chris Mullin, Golden State
 Karl Malone, Utah
 David Robinson, San Antonio

Eastern Conference

Michael Jordan, Chicago
 Isiah Thomas, Detroit
 Charles Barkley, Philadelphia
 Larry Bird, Boston
 Patrick Ewing, New York

Johnson announced on Nov. 10 that he was retiring from active competition because he had contracted HIV. He was the second only to Portland's Clyde Drexler in voting for guards.

Other West starters for the 9 game at Orlando, Fla., will be Drexler, forwards Karl Malone, Utah and Chris Mullin of Golden State and center David Robinson of San Antonio.

The Eastern Conference starters will be Jordan, who led with 1,049,573 votes, Detroit guard Isiah Thomas, forwards Charles Barkley of Philadelphia and Larry Bird of Boston and center Patrick Ewing of New York.

The East team will be coached by Phil Jackson of Chicago and Don Nelson of Golden State will coach the West.

Seven more players will be added to each squad through voting by the head coaches in each conference.

Magic's decision to play in Olympics draws opposition from Australian team

(AP) — Calls for the Australian basketball team to boycott Olympic games against the United States if Magic Johnson plays were met Thursday by a worldwide wave of support for the HIV-infected superstar.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson

Johnson announced his retirement from the Los Angeles Lakers last Nov. 7, after testing positive for the virus that causes AIDS. The NBA said Johnson could play in the All-Star game Feb. 9 after he received the fourth-highest number of votes among Western Conference players.

International basketball officials and U.S. Olympic Committee representatives said there was no health reason to keep Johnson out of the Summer Games. Johnson has said he wants to keep his spot on the U.S. team for Barcelona, although no final decision has been made.

"The risk, especially in a sport like basketball, is very, very, very low," said Dr. Jim Montgomery, the chief physician for the U.S. Summer Olympic team.

On Wednesday, Dr. Brian Sando, the senior medical director of the Australian Olympic Federation's basketball program, said that Johnson presented a realistic threat of passing on the infection if he played in Barcelona.

"I would certainly recommend that our basketballers not compete with a team of which Magic Johnson was a member," Sando said. "That risk you cannot absolutely say it's never going to occur."

The Lakers, in a statement issued through the NBA, said Sando was "ill-informed." His views do not represent the prevailing medical opinion on this subject, and that is that the chances of contracting the HIV virus through athletic competition are infinitesimal.

Mike Moran, a USC spokesman, said Johnson's doctors should make the final decision whether he plays in Barcelona.

"There is no documentation of a single case of HIV being passed through sport," Moran said. "Frankly, in basketball, we feel the risk is zero."

Dr. Jacques Huguet, president of the medical council of FIBA, the international basketball federation, who said the chances of transmitting HIV by mixing of blood through collision is "infinitesimal, maybe one in a million."
