tuit Super Bowl matches lethal trios of receiver

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) – Ricky Sanders of the Washington Redskins, who has set some Super Bowl records himself, looks with awe at James Lofton and Art Monk.

"They're like my grandfathers," he says. "That's what they are. Grandpas." The Redskins and Buffalo Bills enter Sun-day's Super Bowl with super sets of receivers, none more so than the 34-year-old Monk and the 35-year-old Lofton.

Each is within a couple of games of two of Steve Largent's career receiving record Monk, who has 801 career receptions, should pass Largent's 819 early next season, while Lofton is just 55 yards behind Largent's record of 13,089.

Continue with Andre Reed of the Bills and Gary Clark of the Redskins, two of the NFL's most dangerous over-the-middle threats and two of the best runners after a catch. And both go to the Pro Bowl regularly. "Not quite." Clark complains. "Andre goes to Hawaii every year. I just go once in a while.

And finish with two more Buffalo's Don Beebe and Washington's Sanders. They're the speed guys.

Sanders is best known for his 80-yard re-ception in 1988 that started the Redskins' 35point second quarter against the Denver Broncos. He had 193 yards in that game, second only to Jerry Rice's 215 in the 1989 game.

Beebe had his coming out in the second ne this year, when he caught 10 passes, four for touchdowns, in a 52-34 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers. Put all six together and they represent two of the best receiving trios in the league, ap-proached only by the Houston Oilers (Drew

Magic terrified his NBA competition. Assists. Rebounds. Points. Johnson did it all. The only players who weren't afraid to take the court with Magic were his teammates. He was the wrecker of great defenses. The guard that rebounded like a center. The general of showtime, the greatest offensive attack since D-Day.

And it was service with a smile. But now, Johnson is not a professional basketball play-

He is a victim of AIDS.

With the physical nature of basketball, it is not uncommon for a player to bleed during a game. If Johnson were to develop a cut, let's say, after diving for a loose ball, and another player had an open wound, it's possible that the virus could be contracted.

The chances are slim, but they remain.

Surely, there are people who put on their seatbelts even when they're just going down the street to the store. Don't most parents put their children in baby-seats when going for a car trip?

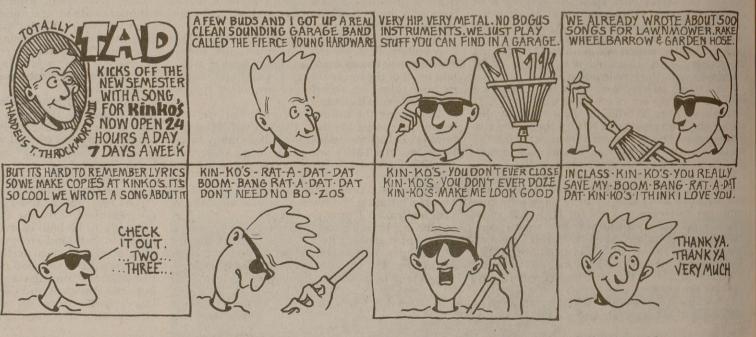

The chances of getting in a car wreck on your way to the store are slim. You can make your trek on quiet residential streets and stay off big thoroughfares. You can drive slowly.

And you probably won't be in an acci dent, but you still go ahead and put the seatbelt on for extra safety. If there's a chance of danger, you take a precaution.

AIDS is different because it deals with people's lives. To make someone an outcas from society because of a disease is wrong. But the Australians aren't trying to ostr cize Magic from society. They're not askin him to live in a bubble and never come out They're asking him to not play in the Olympics. Between his many championship rings and MVP awards, it seems like Magic would consider sitting out. Maybe he will. Maybe he won't. Too bad it's even an issue.
