Vietnamese hold marathon

Officials hope to usher in better economic, world status

HONG KONG (AP) — Vietnam's marathon campaign to end a U.S. economic embargo on the Communist country switched into high gear Sunday with the real thing: the first Ho Chi Minh City International Marathon. Public relations giant Hill and Knowlton was there to help, as were some former American GIs and an American-owned sports promotion company, Sports Asia Ltd. of Hong Kong.

Vietnamese officials said they hoped the race through the heart of what was once Saigon would help catapult the poverty-stricken country out its international isolation.

"It represents an opportunity to show that we are running towards an era of increased international cooperation," said Le Buu, a former Viet Cong soldier who now directs Ho Chi Minh City's Sport and Gymnastic Service.

"We're all part of the same world," said Bob Farmer, a 45-year-old American veteran who was among several former GIs who came for a weekend of international running events. He was blinded in one eye during the Vietnam War while on a patrol in the demilitarized zone.

A Hong Kong-based Briton, Tim Sauter, won the men's marathon, and a Vietnamese, Dang Thi Teo, was the top woman. About 50 Americans were among the 350 entrants.
