5-K race raises funds to fight cancer

participants show up that we had to postpone the race by ten minutes," Galindo said.

The run will begin and end at the Aerofit Club and Activity Center. The run will start at 9:30 Saturday morning.

Kathy Langlotz, assistant manager of Aerofit, said Thomason was an inspiration to everyone he met.

"Bill was a friend to everybody and he never met a stranger," Langlotz said. "If he was in a hurry, you never knew it."

In 1988, the first year of the race, organizers were able to contribute $721 to the American Cancer Society.

The amount has increased every year, and $2952 was donated in 1991.

"We're hoping to set another record this year," Galindo said.

The entry fee for students is $7, and all who participate will receive commemorative T-shirts. Sponsors of the event have donated over 75 door prizes, and winners will be drawn after the race. The grand door prize is a round-trip ticket to anywhere American Eagle flies.

Galindo said the bulk of the participants are students, but a variety of people participate.

"The area around Aerofit gets packed with people," Galindo said. "You find competition runners and families who participate for fun and just want to donate money to a good cause. We sometimes have people bring strollers and walk with their kids."

Galindo hopes the reason for the race will not be overlooked.

"It's a lot of work, but we also have a lot of fun," Galindo said. "We want to maintain Bill's memory, but there is also the challenge to raise funds and to try to do better."

Langlotz also hopes the 5-K run will continue to honor Thomason's memory.

"This race should encourage us to take a few moments to think about our faith in humankind," Langlotz said. "This gives us the opportunity to give back a little of what Bill gave to us."

University holds gala to recognize fund donors since September 1990, and we plan to conclude in August 1996," Prescott said.

The campaign is somewhat complicated, he added.

"Every college and every major unit has its own dollar goal in the campaign," Prescott said. "What we have, in effect, is 15 or so mini-campaigns running under the umbrella of the big campaign... the campaign staff works closely with every college to try to make sure our efforts are coordinated."

The gala is an opportunity to recognize present donors and potential donors. Campaign volunteers will also be recognized.

"This is the first time, in a large-scale way, we tried to get volunteers signed up to help raise the money," he said. "We feel it's always more effective when volunteers are asking prospects for funds, rather than staff members."

Prescott said he hopes the gala will help make people aware of the efforts of "Capturing the Spirit" and make them comfortable about making donations to the University.

"Many people want to help raise money for A&M but don't know the first thing about going about doing it," Prescott said.

Center sells meat products holidays we sell a lot of cured and smoked hams," Riley said.

However, the store does not always sell as much lamb as Riley would like it to.

"We usually don't sell as much lamb as we produce, but we do sell some to international students and people from the northeast, where lamb is a more popular meat than it is in Texas," he said. "Here in Texas, if people are buying meat, it's usually beef or pork."

Riley said visitors to the center ask him if most of the products are sold to students, but this is not the case.

"I think we are probably the best kept secret on campus," he said. "I wish we sold to more students."

While Riley believes the center offers competitively priced merchandise, some prices will fluctuate with market availability.

T-bone steaks generally cost around $5 a pound while half-gallons of ice cream range from $3.15 to $3.50, depending on the flavor.

The center processes from 10,000 to 15,000 pounds of meat a month, 90 percent of which is sold at the retail store at the front of the building, with the other 10 percent being sold to wholesale distributors.

The Rosenthal center operates under an annual budget of $500,000, which is usually about the same amount of money the meat and dairy sales operation pulls in a year, Riley said.

"Some years we make more than $500,000, and some years we don't," he said.

Student receives Eppright Award

He admits to missing his family's cooking back in India, but Natarajan said he has adapted to eating American food.

"I have not eaten Indian food in a long time," he said.

Natarajan also said he has found the United States to be a friendly place - not as dangerous as its reputation abroad.

"People here are willing to help tourists," he said.

Natarajan said he would like to specialize in environmental engineering and work for an international foundation. He said universities need to be more aware of other countries' cultures.

"I think multiculturalism is important on any campus, but especially at A&M," he said. "At the conferences I have been to here they tend to focus on races in the United States, and not on foreigners. I have heard a speaker say 'We don't bother about international cultures,' and I think that's wrong."
