Group monitors classes for bias

ing as we go," he said. "We are still working on a set definition." The group selects which professors will be monitored based on the personal experiences of students in the organization. Keetch said many members of the chapter have taken classes they feel were taught with enough political bias to interfere with learning.

"Political bias is a real threat to education," Keetch said. "Education should be a search for truth, not a search for political bias."

The results of the monitoring process will be compiled, published and made available to students in time to be used during the add/drop period for Fall 1992.

Keetch said he feels any opposition that might come up from students or professors would be unnecessary.

"I think this (monitoring) is one of the most unradical things I could ever think of," Keetch said. "All that we are doing is looking for honesty in the curriculum."

Kerrey intends to support Clinton in race

Kerrey said, "and I did not begin to do that until very late in the campaign."

Kerrey won a big victory Feb. 25 in South Dakota, but never translated his assets into widespread appeal outside his own region. He consistently finished at or near the bottom of the pack.

Kerrey, whose campaign is about $1 million in debt, said money problems contributed to his decision. "We ran out of gas," he said.

There are four Democrats still in the field - Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas, Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin and former California Gov. Jerry Brown.

On the campaign trail, Kerrey insisted that Clinton was unelectable because of questions about the Arkansas governor's use of a draft deferment to avoid serving in Vietnam. But Thursday Kerrey called his attacks "political hyperbole" and said he would campaign "feverishly" for Clinton if he is the nominee.

"The only unelectable politician running for president of the United States is George Bush," Kerrey said.

For weeks in New Hampshire, site of the critical first primary, Tsongas was perceived as a regional candidate and Clinton was beset by allegations about his personal life. But Kerrey was unable to attract voters searching for an alternative.

The first-term senator was an uneven campaigner who alternately impressed and bored audiences. He seemed to move weekly from one theme to another - trade, health, shaking up government, patriotism, electability. He was blunt about his prospects and his plans, to the point of saying he would raise taxes to pay for health-care reforms and infrastructure investment.

Associate dean defends research on animals cultures, and tissue cultures are just a few of the alternatives.

"We feel that animals do not have the same physical systems as humans and technology should take the place of animals," Oesterling said.

Smith said although alternatives to animal testing have been proposed, these suggestions cannot offer sufficient answers to problems faced by the medical community.

"Medical researchers use computer models or tissue cultures whenever they provide the appropriate results," he said.

"Unfortunately, the cases where those can be used are very, very limited."

The main assumption held by animal rights advocates is that animals have the same rights as humans.

Oesterling suggests that researchers and scientists need to concentrate on preventing disease through dietary regulation in humans rather than finding cures for these diseases by using animals.

"Animals are experiencing pain in drawn-out experiments and many animals are used over and over in different experiments," Oesterling said. "Researchers can do anything in the lab and get away with it if it's so-called research."

Ninety percent of the animals used at the A&M College of Medicine - and in most research laboratories - are rats and mice, while the remaining ten percent consists of various animals from monkeys, dogs, cats, bats and several others.

"We use animals as models of human conditions," Smith said. "Which particular type of animal used often depends on what particular study we're doing."

Using animals to model human conditions is essential to scientists because each particular animal may have organs that are similar or comparable to the particular human organ being studied.

"The ultimate defense of using animals is that there is no substitute," Smith said.

"Every medical advance has been made by animal experimentation."

The A&M College of Medicine, as well as the entire research community, views animal testing as a serious responsibility and makes every effort to ensure in the humane and ethical treatment of animals.

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) sets the standards for regulating research facilities. Failure by a medical research facility to comply with regulations can result in loss of state grants and funds for that institution.

Animal rights advocates have recently been put in the limelight as a result of violent demonstrations against research facilities.

Job prospects in B-CS area brighten manufacturing, wholesale/retail trade and services. A decrease in staff, however, is expected in education, according to the survey.

Janice Ray, president and owner of the Bryan-College Station franchise of Manpower Inc. credits the geographical location of Bryan-College Station, the George Bush Presidential Library and the stability of Texas A&M as reasons for the current economic development.

"Here in the Bryan-College Station area, employment prospects are somewhat better than those of three months ago," Ray said. "Twenty-seven percent intended to recruit new workers but 17 percent reported planned cutbacks."

On a national scope, the study reveals an increase of job opportunities in the fields of construction, manufacturing and services with prospects best in the Midwest and South.
