

Never spring break without basketball

"But then the weather didn't really matter if it's raining or not because you just want to do what you want to do."

"Miami had the glitz and the glitter image at that time; it was a show-town, I guess," Barone says.

Rethinking his answer, Barone says he does not know if Miami was really all that interesting. He says the big deal about that spring break was that he, Lewis and Kennedy became more than college roommates.

"We really became friends," he said. "We were quite a group. We did it as an adventure. It wasn't really a vacation. We kind of hung around Miami and tried to make-believe that we belong there."

The trip home for the trio was disastrous. They started to hitchhike back to school and could not get a ride for more than 50 miles or 100 miles at a time.

In the end, Greyhound bus was the answer.

"Riding the bus was a spring vacation in itself," Barone says. "The bus stopped in every small town between Miami and North Carolina. It ended up taking us about two days because of all stops and transferring buses."

"It was the kind of vacation where you need a break when you come back to get over the break you just had," he says.

The relationship that the three teammates developed was very close, Barone says. And he still considers them his best friends today. Kennedy is an administrator for four technical colleges in the Virginia Beach area. And Lewis is an executive with a paper company in North Carolina.

This spring break, Barone hopes that the A&M men's basketball team still will be playing in the Southwest Conference basketball tournament. Otherwise, Barone will spend spring break recruiting.

With Barone, there's never a spring break without basketball.
