

Residents discuss recycling

for a state hearing takes place. Dr. Roy Hartman, associate professor of engineering technology at Texas A&M, said the United States accounts for 6 percent of the world's population and 48 percent of the world's waste.

"We have had this 'throw it away ethic,'" Hartman said. "There is no 'away'. Away is someone else's back yard and we need to come to grips with that."

Hartman said the problem is that there is a very small market for recycled products.

"Recycling without proper markets is only collecting," he said. "We need to have new markets for the materials."

Paul Fagan, director of Junction 505, a non-profit organization that employs people with disabilities for recycling projects, agreed there are not enough markets for recycled products.

"Our problems are the markets," Fagan said. "We are very limited here. Our job is to take products from the raw state and find markets for them and it has not been that easy."

Hartman asked people to educate themselves about recycling and the its benefits.

"The key obstacle is education," he said. "We are all a part of the problem, so we are all, by necessity, a part of the solution."
