Republics violate cease-fire

Armenia blames Azerbaijan for expanding battle over land

BAKU, Azerbaijan (AP) — Armenia on Sunday accused Azerbaijan of trying to expand the battle over Nagorno-Karabakh by lobbing shells over the border between the republics.

But Azerbaijan blamed the newest truce violations on Armenia.

Azerbaijanis and Armenians have fought for four years over Nagorno-Karabakh, but the fighting escalated sharply after the breakup of the Soviet Union.

On Sunday, both republics reported heavy overnight shelling of villages along both sides of the border.

The fighting came despite a cease-fire agreed to last week.

Nagorno-Karabakh is a predominantly Christian Armenian enclave situated inside Azerbaijan. More than 1,000 people have died in the conflict.

Aram Avayan of the Armenian National Security Service said Sunday the cross-border shelling was initiated by Azerbaijan and targeted at the villages of Voskepar and Artnaker in the Naimberyan region. He described the shelling as "massive" and lasting through the night.

Avayan accused Azerbaijan of attempting to draw Armenia into a cross-border conflict. "The Naimberyan shelling is proof of this," he said.

Azerbaijan, in turn, accused Armenia of breaching the truce. Il-dar Memedi, a spokesman for the Azerbaijani Popular Front, said four people were killed and six were wounded in the shelling of three villages in the northwestern Kazakh region of the republic.
