

Community rebuilds after arson damage

BELLEVILLE, Pa. (AP) — An Amish community hit by arsonist a week ago began putting itself back together Monday with an old-fashioned barn-raising. About 150 Amish showed up to help. Laborers worked in teams to build an L-shaped barn at the home of Samuel M. Yoder, one of six people who lost barns, cattle and horses during a two-hour arson spree the morning of March 15. Women prepared meals in Yoder's house, which wasn't damaged by the fire. "There's so much labor that wants to be donated that we can't use it all in one day," said Ivan Peachey of the Mennonite Disaster Services, which is coordinating the reconstruction of all six barns. A relief fund holds nearly $180,000. Area merchants donated food and gasoline-powered saws. Trees were felled last week and area sawmills cut pieces to size. Several of Monday's workers, clad in black clothes and straw hats, traveled from Lancaster, Pennsylvania's best known Amish area. Belleville is located about 100 miles northwest, where Amish-related tourism is practically nil. The workers met at 6:30 a.m. By midday, wooden grids covered half the barn. Two hours later, the corrugated tin roof sheltered most workers from an occasional squall. The site was surrounded by pickup trucks, forklifts and hose drawn buggies. No one has been arrested in the arson spree, which, in addition to destroying the six barns, damaged a seventh and a school house. The fires killed 172 head of livestock. State police said Monday that no motive has been established.
