Board investigates mail tampering

about the rest. Everyone who testified was a student."

Another source said Brooks looked through an envelope containing confidential material relating to Ansbach's presidential campaign, including phone lists and meeting times.

"An informant in the Student Government office noticed David Brooks take the information from Ansbach's box," the second source said.

After Brooks put the information back in the box, the witness called the person who had sent the information. The person discovered the documents were not in the order they were originally placed, and concluded the information had been rifled through, according to the second source.

Senate Speaker Pro Tem Patty Warhol, however, said the mail boxes are not necessarily private, but they are a courtesy to Student Government members.

"If there is something in those boxes they don't want somebody knowing about, they can put it in a sealed envelope," Warhol said. "I don't know if people are going through the boxes or not."

The first source also said the incident may be related to Ansbach's dismissal from the Senate last Wednesday. Eight senators, including Ansbach, were removed as the result of missing two Senate sessions due to unexcused absences.

"Where it gets really bad is that within a week and half of filing charges, he (Ansbach) got thrown off the Senate by the same person," the first source said. "That to me brings up a lot of questions because the two people responsible for letting John know the meeting was changed are Speaker of the Senate David Brooks and Speaker Pro Tem Patty Warhol."

Warhol, however, vigorously denied the allegation, saying she personally placed the memo about the rescheduled meeting in Ansbach's and the other senators' boxes.

"The meeting (last Wednesday) was announced at two meetings. I put a memo in the senators' boxes, saying it was the last meeting and that if it was a senator's last meeting, the senator would be removed from the Senate," Warhol said. "I have a pretty good feeling that John (Ansbach) decided to blow that meeting off either not knowing it was his second absence, or thinking I would not follow up on the policy."

Brooks also refuted any accusation of wrongdoing, saying Ansbach knew about the change in schedule.

"I know John was informed about the meeting because I made the announcement at three meetings prior (to Wednesday's meeting)," Brooks said.

Because of its decision to bar the public from the hearing, the election commission may be in violation of the Texas Open Meetings Law and the Texas Open Records Act.

The Texas Open Records Act provides that a governmental body is "the part, section or portion of every organization, corporation, commission, committee, institution or agency which is supported by public funds or which extends public funds. Public funds as used herein shall mean funds of the State of Texas or any governmental subdivision thereof."

Warhol said the option to close the meeting belongs to the election commissioner.

"I am surprised that it (the meeting) was totally closed doors," Warhol said. "It is James (Phipps) decision, and I would not want to comment one way or the other on something he or his commission has decided as they see to handle a particular situation."

Dr. John Koldus, vice president for student services, said he is sure about when and which decisions of student government are allowed to have closed meetings.

"I seem to remember that some point it was decided student government was within its right to hold a closed meeting, however, I do not know what it was in relation to, and we will just need to look into it."

Dr. Carolyn Adair, director of student activities and student government advisor, was not available for comment.
