Clinton waives privacy, admits past drug use

Arkansas governor said. "I didn't inhale and I didn't try it again." Clinton was at Oxford from 1968 to 1970.

In the last presidential campaign, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt acknowledged smoking marijuana in their youth. Other candidates denied ever trying the drug.

Those questions arose in late 1987 when Douglas Ginsburg withdrew his Supreme Court nomination after disclosing he had smoked marijuana with his students at Harvard University.

The disclosures had little impact on the campaign, but it marked the first time the presidential candidate included people of the generation that grew up on recreational drug use.

Later, in an interview with CBS's "Up To The Minute" program, Clinton said he made the disclosure because "no one had ever asked me the question before... and I really do believe that people really do have a right to some privacy."

Asked if he knew he was breaking English law when he smoked marijuana, Clinton said, "I summed it was against the law, but when we get they told us that as long as we did it inside our rooms or whatever nobody would hassle us... was not into that."

Novelist stresses bilingual writing

As a bilingual novelist, Castedo said the main lesson she has learned is that no matter which language she is translating to, that language seemed to be very deficient.

Surprisingly, Spanish was her first language. She usually writes in English first and then translates the novel in Spanish.

Castedo said that from her lecture, she hoped the audience would learn to love the culture and love the Spanish language.

In addition to the lecture, Castedo was also available in the MSC Bookstore Saturday for a book signing and she held a workshop immediately following which concentrated on the interesting aspect of being a bilingual novelist.

The MSC Committee for Awareness of Mexican American Culture (CAMAC), the Department of Modern and Classical Languages, and the Department of English sponsored the lecture.

Perot's political ambitions remain unclear

ing the offer.

Silber attended a college reunion in Texas this weekend and could not be reached for comment. A native of Texas, Silber was a philosophy professor, and later dean, at the University of Texas in Austin from 1957 to 1970. He became Baylor University's president in 1971.

Silber's name was the second to surface as a possible running mate for Perot. Bert Lance, a former Georgia Democratic chairman, said last week Perot apparently also made offers to Jesse Jackson.

Perot, a self-styled populist, has not announced will seek the presidency. However, he has said he would be willing to spend $50 million of his money if he enters the race.

Perot has said he is waiting to see if supporters in all 50 states work independently to have his name placed on November ballots. That type of grassroots support would probably push Perot into the fray.

Regents establish two TEES centers

Plans that will cost more, effective fall of 1992, are the Seven- and Five-day plans, Flex 12, Lucky Seven, Gold Card and Aggie Express.

In other business, the Regents established two new centers for the Texas Engineering Experiment Station: the Institute of Manufacturing Systems and the Institute for Environmental Engineering.

The Institute of Manufacturing Systems will coordinate research programs in engineering and related fields concerning the proper use of technology and the economics benefits of new manufacturing ideas.

The Institute for Environmental Engineering will conduct research on environmental problems through pollution prevention.

The Regents also approved the establishment of the Center for Distance Learning Research in the College of Education.

The center will research the delivery of instruction, the characteristics of distance learners and basic technology applications and software production for distance learning.

Distance learning involves the transmission of information and instruction through telecommunications networks. An example would be the use of radio and television to teach in the classroom.

The Regents approved the establishment of a quasi-endowment account called the G. and Frieda Soutter Scholarship Quasi-Endowment. The Initial Distribution program in the College of Engineering received $50,000 from the estate of F. Soutter.

This money has been placed in an account, and the interest from the account will be used to award scholarships for industrial distribution students.
