Legislature decreases Texas' budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislative leaders Tuesday reduced the $60 billion state budget by $226 million, warning of severe deficits that include a shortfall to pay counties for housing state prison inmates.

The Legislative Budget Board made the reductions in the face of a requirement that state agencies trim spending by $300 million.

Board members said they planned to meet again within the next couple of months to continue whittling.

The 10-member panel is headed by Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, and House Speaker Gib Lewis, and includes an equal number of Senate

Budget Board trims $226 million to satisfy state-mandated cuts and House members.

"There is nothing sacred," Bullock said. "We're all in this boat together."

The reductions made Tuesday were mostly in the form of savings from less-than-expected costs in a wide range of programs, mostly in the Texas Department of Human Services.

"We didn't cut any services today," said Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville.

But, he warned, that lawmakers in January's regular session will wanted more time to study it.

On the county jail issue, budget experts said the state may fall $135 million short this year in paying counties for the backlog of state inmates in their jails. Last year lawmakers set aside $113 million for the counties.

The payoff to counties was a key factor in the settlement of a lawsuit by counties against the state.

That $135 million shortfall may shrink a little following the decision by state prison officials to purchase six privately built prisons that could house about 2,000 inmates.
