Lifestyles The Battalion

Tuesday, April 28, 1992

day, April 28,

HAVE ROOM

T THE COO

ers, 8

non strugg

on Maas' pinc

oloop down the

the outfielders

he ball down a

do was get the

r relieved & the last out for

s the Yankeess

ifth loss in se

York outhit

neiro's sacrific

lead in the first

nmediately ch

o got just one

and four hits

's RBI doublea

ingles by Baria

econd straight

non failed to get

e got just one it and allowed

explanation,"

thought I hadg ught I madeg

ould say I'mm

ager Bobby Val

on was pretty m own the middl "And it didn'in

s, purchased en n Class AAA0

k over and allow

our hits in four

re with us sti rst inning," been schedu ers. "I was ge

hey told met throwing. I ha and some sle hroom, went

he score in the

RBI groundou

un-scoring sing

ne way.

arde.

its.

Page 5

Juggling act places second at Variety Show 'Throw Up' hurls comedy at Aggie audiences

By Dawn Hellums The Battalion

Don't let the name fool you; Throw Up," a combination comedy and juggling act per-formed by A&M students Lewis Pillsworth and Matt Jones, is definitely something you wouldn't spew over. Juggling anything from clubs, torches, machetes, fruit, and bowling balls, the twoman act is sure to provide an entertaining show

'We're good showmen; we relate well to the audience," Pillsworth said. "People always seem to enjoy us and get into the show, which is fun."

The two perform their show in special events, talent shows, parades, and birthday parties all over the state. They made their fourth appearance at the MSC Variety Show Friday night and placed second. Jones said this is their favorite performance of the year because they enjoy performing in front of large audiences. "We naturally like to goof around, and we're not afraid of performing in front of a large crowd," said Jones, who is a senior Speech Communication major. "Being the center of attention doesn't scare us at all; we're both natural goof balls.

Pillsworth and Jones began performing together four years ago after they met at Fish Camp. They both started juggling at the age of twelve, and made perfor-mances throughout their high school careers

Jones' first interest in jug-gling came after he saw a man perform juggling tricks on television. He then started juggling or-anges around the house until he improved enough to juggle clubs and other items.

Pillsworth story was a little different.

home sick with pneumonia and a friend of mine bought me a juggling kit," Pillsworth said. "I liked it and kept doing it every since.

Jones, 6' 4", and Pillsworth, 5' 3", agree that their size difference is the vehicle of their show. Merely standing next to one another, reading "throw" and "up" across the front of their t-shirts brings the crowd to a roar. In their act, Jones crawls up on Pillsworth shoulder and juggles torches while eating an apple.

"A lot of our comedy comes from our differences," said Pillsworth, who has a degree in Speech Communications. "Physical size is good humor for us."

Pillsworth and Jones are both self taught jugglers. They come up with most of their tricks themselves, or learn from watching other jugglers. Pillsworth said most of their acts they put together just before they perform.

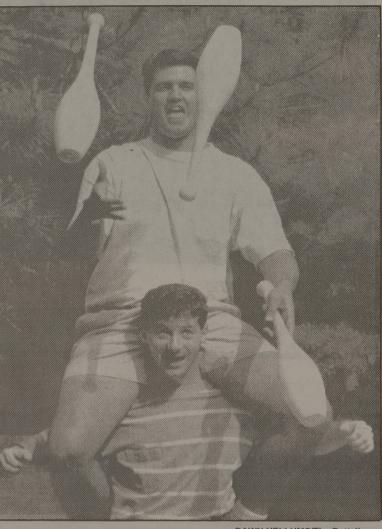

"Pressure is a great motiva-tor for our stuff," Pillsworth said. "We take what we can do solidly and make the show around that."

With busy schecdules, it's difficult for them to find a time to practice. When they do, it's between 11 a.m. and 1pm in Rudder Auditorium.

What makes their act unique is the comedy they use along with their tricks. They also write their own comedy lines, which they say isn't easy if they have to sit down and think them up.

'Most of our comedy comes to us right before we go to bed or in a dream," Jones said. "It's a sudden inspiration, you can't force it." They said they also find comedy through improvisations in their shows Juggling dangerous equiperent. ment such as machetes and "In the 7th grade I was at torches is a highlight of their

DAWN HELLUMS/The Battalion

Matt Jones (top) and Lewis Pillsworth call themselves "juggling outlaws." They made their fourth and final appearance at Friday's 1992 Variety Show.

show. They pick a member out of the audience to stand in between them when they juggle torches, which they said is more nerve racking for the audience member than them.

"We just throw them up in the air and try not to catch the burning or sharp side," Jones said. "It keeps us on our toes."

Musical, comedy talent take tops at Variety Show

By Timm Doolen The Battalion

The 1992 Variety Show offered a great diversity of entertainment and an interesting singing group as the winner. The barbershop quartet Night 'n Day, who took the top prize, sang music more than 100 years old.

The voices of Derrick Arel-lano, Kevin Kennedy, Clay Lip-scomb and Tommy Newsom combined to make one beautifully harmonious sound on "Ride the Chariot," an old black Gospel dating back to slave days. The group's other songs were "I Wonder Why" from the '50s and "Hello My Baby," a turn-of-the-century barbershop classic.

"I was confident that we did a good job, especially after the first song," Newsom said. "When we hit that last chord, I thought we had a good shot. It was that intense of a song."

The group itself is about four years old, and all of the members except Newsom have been singing together for the past two years.

Newsom said When he joined at the beginning of this semester, the group set a lot of goals, one of which was participating in Variety Show. Little did they know that a few months later the group would be walking away with the first place trophy

Although some of the members will be graduating in the next few months, the group plans to stay together and keep singing competitively.

Taking second place in the show was the perennial Variety Show favorite, Throw Up, the comedy juggling act of Matt Jones and Lewis Pillsworth. Head yell leader Ronnie Mc-Donald_assisted the duo by standing in between flaming torches which were being juggled around his body

This is the fourth and last appearance of Throw Up on the stage of Variety Show because both members are close to graduation.

"I'm sad that I can't do Vari-ety Show again, but I'm glad I did it over the past few years," Jones said. "It's the biggest and best crowd.'

best crowd." Coming in third was Kyle Hutton, who performed two country songs, "You Don't Count the Cost" by Billy Dean and his own "Center Stage Someday." In the latter, he ex-tolled his dreams of someday hitting the big time in country music. music

Rounding out the perfor-mances were a "variety" of acts covering a broad spectrum of artistic disciplines. Christy Welch, Craig Smith and the groups Bayou, Flash-back '40s and the Polkadets, offered a diversity of musical entertainment.

Welch and Bayou provided mainstream pop and rock mu-sic with "It Always Comes Back to You" and "Heart of the Matter," respectively.

Craig Smith featured a medley of Jerry Lee Lewis songs and even lit a half-circle of the stage on fire during "Great Balls of Fire."

Flashback '40s featured World War II-era female harmonies from Joanna Spiars, Margey Moore and Kim Turn-

The Polkadets displayed the humor of 11 members of the Aggie Band under the guise of German oompah band

Drum Major and Student Body President Steve Beller provided most of the narration, while freshmen Joel Lang and See Variety Show/Page 6

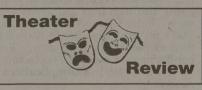

Aggie Players finish off strong wn to the bulk season with 'P.S. Your Cat is Dead'

By Timm Doolen The Battalion

strong year with a delightful pro- both Jimmy and his rouna duction of "P.S. Your Cat is former the same guy who robbed Jimmy twice before, he is also bisexual and makes The Aggie Players finish up a some suggestions to

By the end of the play they've formed an awkward, if tenuous, friendship, and their two worlds come to some sort of mutual meeting ground.

matched by that of Sam Levassar as Vito. The two have a definite rhythm and played well off each other. This is one of the few nonprofessional plays where I really believed in the plausibility of the This is a characters throughout the entire production.

In Advance Latino Theatre Group presents 'La Mano'

urgery healed BYU to the We ers are fine, don ns with them." ertain Detmer OS.

round pick with est deal since '' he said. "Ine najor step up

et that on theb

ge."

ders.

e is the guy a een chosen in ner said hewou feelers from th and holds him hostage. ll League.

This Fallout Theater producder and them tion features a bizarre, modern noulder. Lasts story by James Kirkwood about two unlikely companions who nference champ slowly start to grow on each other.

Zoole, an actor who's down on his said. "I have luck after losing his Broadway and soap opera jobs on the same day - New Year's Eve. On top of this, he has been robbed twice in the past three months, his girlfriend leaves him during the play and, (you guessed it) his cat dies.

> way. He finds a burglar in his nouse and knocks him unconscious. So that he will have company and a little fun on New Year's Eve, he ties the burglar up

Clay Loveless plays Jimmy But things start to turn his

It turns out that not only is this girlfriend, Kate (Amy Jimenez). As the night progresses, the two quit

bickering and settle down into some serious conversations about their pasts, their losses and their lives. Jimm v plays life too safe, and Vito, the burglar, has had to deal with a lot of problems Jimmy probably never could have imagined before the encounter.

refreshingly original play - there's no grand, spectacular messages to be drawn from it, just a few humble and unique ideas. And it works very effectively, especially in a small theater such as the Fallout.

h e wonderful performance by Loveless makes the show, and it is nearly

There were some minor flaws, such as some comedy that fell short and a few lines that sounded a little hackneyed. But these were minor distractions of the script in an otherwise solid show.

This play rounds out the Aggie Players' season and Loveless's performances at Texas A&M. Loyeless, who is by far one of the most talented actors at A&M, is leaving to study drama at New York University. Loveless will be missed.

"P.S. Your Cat is Dead" runs tonight through Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Fallout Theater, 144 Blocker, with a Saturday matinee. Tickets, which are $4, can be pur-chased at 152 Blocker (862-2052).

tonight in Rudder

The Latino Theatre Group presents "La Mano," a locally written play about life in the barrio tonight at 7 p.m. in Rudder Theatre

As the play opens, the main character, Johnny Pachuko, is in prison, reflection on his life in the barrio. In flashback, he remembers his life with his brother, a disabled Vietnam veteran. After being shot in the head in Vietnam, he has spiritual visions.

Writer-director Robert Villareal, an A&M student, said the play is about dealing with anger among Hispanics and Latinos, along with a lot of spiritual symbolism.

Villareal said only a small portion of the play is in Spanish and people who don't understand Spanish will have no problem following the play.

An offshoot of the MSC Committee for the Awareness of Mexican-American Culture, the Latino Theatre has been in existence for more than three years

For more information about tickets ($3), call 845-1234.

A two-act play focusing on the plight of two brothers trapped in the struggle for survival in the barrio.

Tuesday, April 28, 1992 7:00 p.m. Rudder Theatre Tickets for $3 available through MSC Box Office For more information contact CAMAC at 845-1515