Texan 'pack rat' opens museum of quirky artwork

POST, Texas — It isn't the Louvre, but lovers of such quirky artworks as porcelain rattlesnakes and Russian lacquer boxes might find a new museum on the West Texas Plains is for them.

The OS Ranch Foundation Museum, which displays the private art collection amassed by former Post Mayor Giles McCrary, opened Saturday.

The collection includes art — both familiar and exotic — from McCrary's travels over the past 12 years.

In addition to the porcelain reptile and Russian boxes, there are ebony wood sculptures from Burma and Faberge eggs.

"A pack rat is what I am," said McCrary, a native of Fort Worth. "This was for my personal pleasure . . . to get things that I was interested in."

Said museum curator Marie Neff, "He's a very discriminating pack rat. He gets only the neat things that would really pique your interest."

Street names in 3,500-year-old city recognize various events, places

JERUSALEM — To get to your neighborhood grocery in this 3,500-year-old city, you may have to brave the Valley of the Ghosts, cross the Bridge of Life, or pass by Gates of Justice.

Forget about Main Street. The street names here betray a fiery history of war, conquest and politics mixed with religion.

The Way of the Prophets leads to Words of Truth. Valley of the Crucifixion Street crosses Gates of Mercy. Mule Drivers Street, named for a World War I British brigade, runs into Ghetto Fighters, which memorializes Jews who fought the Nazis.

On the biblical Hill of Evil Counsel, there is Those Who Are Hanged Street, named for pre-state Jewish underground fighters condemned by the British.

Despite its name, a popular meeting place in the old walled city is the Dung Gate, called so after a nearby dump. It's not far from the Way of Suffering, more popularly known by the Latin name Via Dolorosa, the route tradition says Jesus took to his crucifixion.

Imagine living on Every Generation Has Its Preachers Street — origin unknown.

Moshe Piro, who has been affixing street signs here for the past 30 years, said at least 70 percent of Jerusalem's 2,000 streets have been paved and named since Israeli independence in 1948.

Open an Israeli map of Jerusalem and show it to a Palestinian; chances are he won't recognize some of the names. Street names are contentious anywhere, but particularly in the Holy City, with its clash of religions, cultures and peoples.

U.K. upholds baby sitter law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — A Swedish youth cannot work as a live-in baby sitter in Britain because he is male, the Home Office said Sunday in ordering the young man to leave England.

An au pair, or resident baby sitter, must be an unmarried female age 17 to 27 and without dependents, according to immigration rules, a Home Office spokesman said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Johan Egelstedt, 19, does not qualify, and must leave Monday.

"I was amazed, breathtakingly staggered by them saying that we couldn't have a male au pair," said Alain Baughan, who had hired Egelstedt to watch his four children.

The Equal Opportunities Commission issued a statement expressing concern about sexual discrimination.

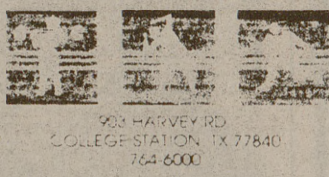

The Independent newspaper on Saturday quoted the Home Office as saying young men were excluded "in case it opens up an avenue for potential abuse of U.K. immigration control in a way that could undermine the objective of protecting the domestic labor market."
