just like blasphemy." Motl also hopes to renew Aggie men the qualities of a dier, statesman, and knight gentleman." In weekly meetings, Motl enlist the help of University faculty and former Aggies as speakers to lecture about characteristics of leaders as well as other campus leaders to counselors to Fish Club members.

"Through the Aggie Fish Club, we hope to build leaders and spread mind frames through hands on leadership development," Motl said.

In conjunction with its weekly meetings, Aggie Fish Club will participate in activities such as roller skating, cleaning status campus and adopting their own strip of highway by Madisonville.

Motl said the club will have table at MSC Open House as well as an informational meeting Monday, Sept. 7, at 6:30 p.m. room 292 in Rudder breezeway. There will be an application and interview process with 42 freshmen selected.

Motl hopes that all interested freshmen will come out and inquire about the club.

"If you want fun, family, leadership and Fightin' Texas Aggie spirit, then Aggie Fish Club is only club for you," Motl said.

that is determined by the balance that is owed and the minimum payment amount.

According to Deirdre Smith, an accounts manager at CCCS in Houston, people pay about 50 percent less working through the service than they would if they paid the creditors directly.

The only criteria CCCS requires is that the consumer wanting assistance has a definite income, regardless of the source. Smith says this service can also educate students.

"I think that they have benefited in that they're disciplined now. We're like a self-help program. We help people help themselves," she said.

Creditors support the CCCS by giving a 15 percent contribution for each client for which the service collects. According to Smith, the Consumer Credit Counseling Service plan is an alternative to bankruptcy.

Students can contact the local Bryan-College Station branch of CCCS which is located on Texas Avenue, but appointments must be made through the Houston head office at (713) 822-6110.

Tent cities hang out vacancy signs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — Building inspectors and social workers went door-to-door Thursday, trying to coax more people out of their hurricane-ravaged and possibly dangerous homes and into military tent cities.

More rain fell on the area smashed by Hurricane Andrew on Aug. 24, making busy roads slippery and weighing down soaked, sagging ceiling materials exposed by the storm. At least four homes collapsed overnight because of the rain, Homestead Police Maj. Chuck Habermehl said.

No new injuries were reported.

Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton joined the long line of politicians visiting southern Florida, flying to the heavily damaged Homestead Air Force Base that President Bush promised to rebuild even though some Democrats in Congress are opposed.

pictures, Corps of Cadets pictures and Resident Hall Association pictures this fall. All group pictures will be arranged by the Aggieland staff. AR Photography will take between 300 and 400 organization pictures.

AR Photography also does fashion, bridal, family and "Boot" portraits in their upstairs studio. Students wishing to have additional portraits taken should plan on making their appointments one week in advance for a Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

Other classes will be scheduled as follows: freshmen from Oct. 5 through Oct. 30; sophomores from Nov. 2 through Nov. 20; and juniors from Nov. 23 through finals. Graduate students, veterinary students and medical students can have their class pictures done at any time.

Advertisements reminding students of the schedule for class pictures will run throughout the fall semester in The Battalion.

"But, the one thing that reminds most students to come in and get their picture taken is their Mom calling and saying, 'Have you had your picture taken for the Aggieland yet?'" Hinkle said.
