Death penalties on the rise

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — More prisoners likely will be put to death in the United States this year than in any year since states were allowed to resume capital punishment in 1976.

The execution of a Texas murderer Tuesday raised this year's total to 25, tying the previous high set in 1987.

Texas death row inmate James Demouchette was killed by lethal injection Tuesday for two 1976 murders in Houston. His was the 10th execution in Texas this year.

More than 2,600 men and women are on death rows across the nation; dozens of them have executions scheduled in the remaining three months of 1992. Many are likely to win postponements, however.

Leigh Dingerson of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty predicted a growing number of executions in future years.

"More death row prisoners are exhausting their appeals, and it's also very clear there's a new mood in federal and state courts that is much less tolerant of death row appeals," she said.

Those factors will cause "a slight rise in the yearly totals," Dingerson said, adding, "I don't believe there will be any sudden release of the floodgates. There are many complex factors that go into the pace of executions."

The Supreme Court in 1972 ruled that capital punishment as then practiced was unconstitutional. States subsequently passed new laws and in 1976 the court ruled that the death penalty could, under certain guidelines, be constitutional.

Demouchette's execution was the 182nd since the ruling.

Year-by-year summary:

1977 — One.	1985 — 18.
1978 — None.	1986 — 18.
1979 — Two.	1987 — 25.
1980 — None.	1988 — 11.
1981 — One.	1989 — 16.
1982 — Two.	1990 — 23.
1983 — Five.	1991 — 14.
1984 — 21.	1992 — 25.

The last year more than 25 executions occurred in the United States was 1962, when 47 prisoners were put to death. Executions were far more common in the 1950s, with no fewer than 49 in any year that decade.

The record year for U.S. executions this century was 1935, with 199.

Kissinger disputes POW, MIA allegations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Henry Kissinger on Tuesday denounced as "a flat-out lie" the allegation that he and others knew U.S. servicemen were left behind when the war in Southeast Asia ended two decades ago.

Two people who made such suggestions Monday were Kissinger's colleagues from the Nixon administration — defense secretaries James R. Schlesinger and Melvin Laird.

The former secretary of state and national security adviser acknowledged that even as he negotiated peace with the North Vietnamese, he recognized they had not provided an adequate accounting for missing Americans.

"I think it's improbable any are alive today," Kissinger said. "I have always kept open the possibility in my mind there were some in Laos."

Kissinger testified a day after other former Nixon officials, including Schlesinger and Laird, said they believed some American prisoners were still in Vietnam or Laos after the withdrawal of U.S. troops and the 1973 release of more than 591 prisoners of war. The former defense secretaries cited reliable reports of more POWs than were released.

"If we had known, if we had heard this, we would have acted on it," Kissinger said.

He bitterly disputed suggestions "that when President Nixon announced that all prisoners were on the way home, he or his aides knew that many were left behind."

"The allegation is a flat-out lie," Kissinger said, blaming the assertions on "leaks that could only have come from this inquiry."

Kissinger acknowledged receiving "some reports alleging that live Americans were still in Indochina," and said they "were taken seriously" by U.S. officials.

"But no confirmed reports of living American prisoners ever crossed my desk, although I'm not saying they did not exist," he said.

The Senate committee room was crowded with spectators, some Vietnam veterans wearing camouflage jackets and war decorations. Some were relatives of men still unaccounted for.

ripped the signs to pieces. The publicans then stood directly in front of the banner to obscure the message.

Castillo said the fact that a rally took place on University property means organizers should have allowed students to bring any type of sign they wanted.

"We paid school fees, just like they did," Castillo said. "They had thousands of [Bush-Quayle] signs. What difference would make if we had just a few of our own?"

Lisa Avila, vice president of programs for the A&M College Republicans, said sponsorship of the event, not fee payment, determined who could bring what.

"Lots of us pay fees," Avila said. "Some of us don't agree with funding for GLSS or NOW. The University didn't pay for [the rally] — we did and the Bush-Quayle campaign did. [The University] went out of their way to be partisan."

Quayle

Republican education policy is to allow parents to choose the schools they send their children to, Quayle said.

Another agenda item Quayle attacked Clinton on was health care reform. The future of the U.S. health care plan has been seen by many political analysts as the fulcrum of the election year see-saw. The current plan has been mired in continuous controversy and labeled ineffective, and partial to middle-to-upper-class Americans.

"By the year 2000 . . . the average family will be spending $12,000 a year on health insurance," Quayle said.

The average cost of health care is increasing at a rate twice that of the average inflation rate, which has left 34 million Americans without adequate health care.

The Republican agenda includes lowering health care costs by passing medical malpractice legislation limiting rewards to plaintiffs in malpractice suits.

"We want to make sure every American has health insurance, and we want to do it through tax credits and vouchers, and not a national ration health care plan."

The Republican plan also would grant tax credits to employers who provide health care for their employees, and would allow unemployed Americans access to quality, affordable health care.

"There is no doubt in my mind that Texas is for George Bush."
