Rescue teams search crash site for hundreds buried under wreckage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — With little hope of finding anyone alive, workers searched carefully Monday for hundreds feared entombed in the tottering ruins of an apartment building torn open by a crashing El Al jumbo jet.

Fourteen bodies had been recovered, and authorities said 250 people were unaccounted for.

But it was not known if all were at home Sunday evening when the pilot lost an eight-minute struggle to get his crippled Boeing 747 cargo plane back to Schiphol Airport and slammed into the angle of the V-shaped building.

As the country struggled to cope with its worst disaster in four decades, investigators said it was too early to determine what caused the two engines on the Israeli plane's right wing to tear away shortly after it took off.

The pilot, Yitzhak Fuchs, had reported that two of the jet's four engines were on fire. Dutch television said the plane circled twice in a vain attempt to get lined up with the runway.

All four people on the jet died. The disaster could prove to be the worst plane crash involving casualties on the ground worldwide.

Hutton Archer, spokesman for International Civil Aviation Organization in Quebec, said a Boeing 707 cargo plane crashed in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, in 1976, killing 78 on the ground and injuring 78 seriously.

Smoldering and falling debris prevented all but the most cautious search at the cordoned-off site. Dutch television quoted officials as saying parts of bodies could be seen under charred and twisted steel, concrete and armor plates.

Huge chunks of concrete plummeted onto a pile of rubble three stories high as workmen used cranes to shore up the crumbling edges of the 10-story structure. Dogs were being used to search for survivors. But even for a few pets that crawled to safety, there were no signs of life in the interiors of dozens of apartments with all their furnishings eerily exposed.

"We are trying to recover victims. But because of the danger of collapse, the recovery is very difficult and will take very long," said a police spokeswoman, Elly Florax.

At a news conference just after dawn, a shaken Mayor Ed van Thijn said, "At this moment we only know that the size of the catastrophe is incredible."

Employee strike causes USAir to cancel flights

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IMPERIAL, Pa. — Ground crews for USAir, the nation's sixth-largest airline, walked off the job Monday in a dispute over job security, canceling flights for thousands of people.

Flight attendants voted to honor the picket lines, which sprouted at dawn at airports around the country, including USAir hubs in Charlotte, N.C., and Pittsburgh, where 28 strikers were arrested. Airline pilots said they would continue to work.

USAir said three-quarters of its 2,600 daily departures were taking off and other carriers were accepting stranded passengers. Some travelers forced to find other ways home didn't have much sympathy for the strikers.

"Look at that. Canceled, canceled, canceled. Every 15 minutes it changes," said Philadelphia-bound Sherry Parisi, who was stuck in Charlotte with her sister-in-law, Janice Graf.

"I don't know how anybody could do this in this economy," said Graf. "It takes a lot of nerve."

The striking union, the International Association of Machinists, represents about 8,300 employees and many of them said the main issue was job security.

At the newly-opened Pittsburgh International Airport, 25 people were arrested Monday afternoon for trespassing, and three for allegedly carrying brass knuckles.

The Association of Flight Attendants, which represents 9,000 USAir employees, said the leaders of its USAir group had voted to honor the strike.

The USAir unit of the Air Line Pilots Association said its members would fly.

USAir said its overseas flights were not affected, nor were the USAir Express and USAir Shuttle services.

At the Pittsburgh airport, passengers had more time than expected to enjoy the mall-like atmosphere in the $800 million Midfield Terminal, which opened Thursday.

The amenities range from fast-food restaurants and fern bars to upscale stores selling books, cosmetics, jewelry, sunglasses and gifts.

Union and airline negotiators were unable to agree on a new contract after lengthy weekend talks that lasted into Monday morning. National Mediation Board spokesman Lew Townsend said no other talks were scheduled.

USAir is asking all employees for wage, benefit and work rule concessions, so it can cut costs by about $400 million this year. Pilots agreed to salary concessions in June.

Chairman Seth E. Schofield accused the Machinists of being "unwilling to make the same contribution and sacrifices as other USAir employee groups during this difficult economic period."
