Egypt

buildings in Egypt are built with a different material. "We build with reinforced concrete and concrete blocks instead of timber, so the damage is a lot worse," said Imam. Since the earthquake occurred in the afternoon, many children died when their school buildings collapsed on top of them. In the poorer neighborhoods, where most of the damage occurred, Imam said the structures were old and considered unfit for habitation in the first place. They were mainly occupied by some of the many poor Egyptians who migrated to Cairo. Imam added that the death toll could have been much worse. There are more than 500 dead in Cairo, a city of 14 million, while San Francisco, a city of less than a million, had 56 dead in their earthquake. Considering that San Francisco has building codes and less than one-tenth the population of Cairo, the quake was not as bad as it could have been, said Imam. Egyptian Earthquake Relief Fund ISNA PO Box 38 Plainfield, Indiana 46168-0038 (317) 839-8157
