Democrats gain votes on campus

By JULI PHILLIPS

Reporter of THE BATTALION

Although Texas A&M has historically been a Republican haven, support for the Democratic Party is on the rise, members of Aggie Democrats said.

According to numbers released by the Aggie Democrats, membership has increased from 50 members to 500 members.

"Membership always increases in election years," Aggie Democrat Communications Chair Ron Going said. "But the increase is really big for this year."

The number of Aggie Democrats in 1988, the last presidential Democratic Party receives membership boost, support among A&M students election, was over 200 students with 90 members "active."

Out of the 500-plus members this year, over 100 are considered "active."

Since the past election, the Aggie Democrats have seen steady growth with only one plunge in membership - 1991, the year of Desert Storm.

Going said that despite the growth of the visible Democrat faction on campus, few are staunch supporters of the Clinton-Gore ticket.

campus, however, remains high for President George Bush.

According to a MSC Political Forum informal poll, out of 267 people polled, 45 percent supported Bush, 38 percent supported Governor Clinton and 13 percent supported Texas businessman Ross Perot.

The low percentage of Perot support on campus may come as a surprise to local Perot supporters.

"When this thing is all finished," Bryan-College Station Perot Campaign Coordinator Jim Raatz said, "half of the campus will end up voting for Perot."

"Most of the members are Democrat supporters," Going said. "We have very few 'yellow-dog' supporters in our group. Actually, in both groups (College Republicans and Aggie Democrats), there are very few 'yellow-dog' supporters."

"Yellow-dog" supporters are members of parties who wholeheartedly support the candidate of their party without regard to the personal stands of the candidates on issues.

Americans seek faithful family man for office, Quayle says

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio — Vice President Dan Quayle delivered fresh attacks on Bill Clinton's character on Sunday, saying the American people want a president who "is faithful to their family."

After services in the Presbyterian church where he was baptized, Quayle switched into his attack mode at a boisterous rally in a school gym.

"The American people want to trust their president. Do you trust Bill Clinton?" he asked. The partisan crowd of 2,500 chorused, "No."

"Would you trust Bill Clinton to take care of your children ... (and) your family?" he added. "Then let's make sure that we don't exchange George and Barbara Bush for Bill and Hillary Clinton."

"The American people want their president to be faithful to their country. They want a president that is faithful to their principles, and they want a president that is faithful to their family," said Quayle, in an only slightly veiled reference to Clinton's past marital difficulties.

Pressed on whether he was accusing Clinton of being unfaithful to his wife, the vice president replied, "I'll let others answer that."

No Republican president has ever captured the White House without Ohio, and Quayle stopped briefly to face reporters at the airport in Cincinnati before heading on to rallies in Hopkinsville, Ky., and New Orleans.

Perot renews attacks on Clinton, Bush

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Ross Perot sharpened his attacks on President Bush and Bill Clinton on Sunday with a 30-minute ad that derides Republican and Democratic economic policies.

After weeks of training his sights almost exclusively on Bush, Perot turned to Clinton, criticizing the state of Arkansas' economy and Clinton's leadership as its governor.

"If you look at every single factor in his 12 years in Arkansas, you'll realize that when you're at the bottom of everything, there's no place to go but up," Perot told about 10,000 people at a rally at the Long Beach Arena.

The theme was repeated in the 30-minute ad, "Deep Voodoo, Chicken Feathers and The American Dream," airing Sunday night on ABC and NBC.

The attack departs from Perot's earlier statement that Clinton's record in Arkansas was "irrelevant" to his bid for the White House.

"So basically, Arkansas is a relatively small-population state and a relatively small state in terms of its geographic area ... you might say the governor's running a medium-size business," Perot said, echoing Republican charges that Clinton is "the failed governor of a small state."

The ad goes on to attack Bush's economic policies, including a quote from a Bush eco-conomic adviser that he didn't care whether the United States made potato chips or computer chips.

"So we've got the chicken man and the potato chip man, and you've got me," Perot said.

During Sunday's appearances, Perot spoke much less about Bush but did blame him for California's economic troubles and savings and loan woes. After stopping in Long Beach, he and running mate James Stockdale were low ranking in numerous categories and mocks its reliance on the poultry industry.

"Now there's no place to go but up," he said. "That's the good news. ... Talk is cheap, folks. Action is dear. Arkansas is at the bottom."

The Clinton campaign issued a five-page, point-by-point rebuttal to charges Perot made about Arkansas' economy with its own, equally annotated footnotes.

Perot was trying in weekend campaign rallies to erase voters' doubts that grew out of his withdrawal from the race in July.

In weekend polls, Perot's standing ranged from 14 percent in a Gallup poll taken for CNN and USA Today, to 18 percent in an ABC poll. The New York Times had the independent at 15 percent and CBS put Perot at 17 percent.

He was faring better in California, where The Field Poll taken Oct. 25-28 showed Perot with 23 percent. Clinton led the state with 45 percent and Bush 29. The poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.1 percentage points.

Perot also aired on Sunday a half-hour commercial on ABC and an hourlong presentation on NBC. On Monday night, he bought time on each of the three major networks for an Election Eve message.

And in a taped interview with MTV aired Sunday night, Perot said young people should vote for him because he is the only candidate serious about cutting the deficit. "We're spending our children's money," he said.

"So we've got the chicken man and the potato chip man, and you've got me."

Railroad

Williamson's interest in conflict with the role of the railroad commissioner.

"He's in the oil business, and he wants to regulate the oil business," Guerrero said. "It's kind of like the fox wanting to guard the henhouse."

"The opportunity to manipulate the government for personal gain is in the very essence wrong. If it is not illegal, it is totally unethical."

Williamson said his wife's holdings are in a blind trust, and he has promised to avoid any proceedings that would directly affect his family's interest. The Railroad Commission regulates oil and gas production and the trucking industry in Texas.

"Well I imagine his trust is blind, but he's not," Guerrero said.

"He'll go every weekend to the ranch and see the (family's) wells going up and down. He'll know what's going on out there."

Since her resignation, Guerrero has continued to attack Williamson's record with the Department of Energy during a "Bush energy administration where they lost 400,000 jobs."

Gore claims Bush gets canine advice

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — Democrat Al Gore said Sunday that President Bush must have taken advice to "roll over and play dead" on domestic policy from Millie the White House dog.

The vice presidential candidate's broadside was the latest in an increasingly bitter campaign that has turned personal in the waning days and was Gore's most direct response to a comment made last week by the president.

During a stop in Michigan last week, Bush said his springer spaniel Millie knew more about foreign policy than "these two bozos."

At Western Michigan University on Sunday, Gore quipped:

"Maybe it was Millie who told him to roll over and play dead on domestic policy." The crowd roared its approval.

Surprised aides said afterward that Gore's remarks were not part of the speech he had planned to deliver.

Name-calling has become almost standard fare on the campaign trail recently. Bush frequently calls Gore "Mr. Ozone" or just plain "Ozone" because of the senator's strong environmental stands. Gore said last week that the reference was an insult to voters, but he has since taken to making light of it.

"I've decided that to be called Ozone man by the environmental president is a real honor," said Gore, who has written a best-selling book on the environment.
