Steelworkers win lawsuit; company to pay pensions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — Moe Tomlinson is thrilled he and 1,900 other steelworkers won a lawsuit that accused USX Corp. of cheating them out of their pensions.

Now they must figure out what the victory means in dollars and cents.

A federal judge sided with workers who accused USX of deliberately closing a mill in 1986 to cheat them out of millions of dollars in pension benefits.

Attorneys on both sides have mentioned damage figures ranging from $5 million to well over $100 million.

"The way it stands right now, we haven't seen any dollar figures," Tomlinson said Thursday.

"Every channel on TV last night had a different one."

U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins, who awarded the damages, said the amount would be determined at future hearings. The ruling, signed Tuesday, came 17 months after an eight-week trial.

Jenkins agreed USX closed the profitable Orem mill to save on pension costs.

He also said the company illegally changed its pension plans in the months before the closure.

Pittsburgh-based USX, formerly U.S. Steel, said the closure was part of a $1.2 billion restructuring of 10 steel mills involving about 6,500 workers.

The mill was closed in 1986 and sold in 1987 to Basic Manufacturing & Technology of Utah, which became Geneva Steel of Utah. The company reopened the mill, and about 1,000 of the plaintiffs, including Tomlinson, work there.

Tomlinson, 51, has survived a heart attack and said he worries most about receiving retirement health insurance. "That'll be my big concern, when I finally find out what the judge has ruled."

Dawne Hickton, a USX attorney, said the company may appeal.

The plaintiffs also may appeal Jenkins' earlier ruling throwing out age discrimination claims, which could have netted them double damages, said plaintiffs' attorney Allen Young.

Tony Pickering, in whose name the 1987 lawsuit was filed, has said he lost $250,000 in pension benefits because he was a few months short of 20 years of service.

"Someone might have lost a little, another might have lost huge income and pensions," said Young. "We have to prove each guy's loss."

About 30 plaintiffs have died and awards will go to their estates.

Insider settles suit in Dallas

Ivan Boesky to pay Maxus Energy Corp. $50 million

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Former Wall Street arbitrager Ivan Boesky agreed to pay Maxus Energy Corp. $50 million to settle an insider trading lawsuit, the company said Thursday.

Maxus has previously announced settlements with two other defendants — Kidder, Peabody & Co. Inc. and its former takeover guru Martin Siegel.

Under the agreement, Maxus said it hopes to recover up to $15 million primarily from the division of assets of Boesky's former marriage. The rest will be recovered from future earnings or from any undisclosed assets, the company said.

In a $2.2 billion lawsuit that went to trial last month, Maxus had accused Siegel, Boesky and Kidder Peabody of defrauding the company's predecessor, Diamond Shamrock Corp., when it tried to buy Natomas Co., a San Francisco-based oil and gas firm, in 1983.

Maxus later decided to drop former merger strategist Siegel from the lawsuit in return for his testimony against Boesky.

On Wednesday, Siegel testified that he gave confidential information to Boesky, providing the first direct evidence of Maxus' claims of insider trading in the Natomas deal.

Siegel earlier had refused to answer questions about the Natomas transaction, citing his right against self-incrimination.

"I rationalized that these things I was doing weren't going to hurt anybody," he testified.

"That wasn't the case. They hurt a lot of people."

On Oct. 10, Maxus accepted a $125 million settlement with Kidder, Peabody.

Kidder also agreed to pay $40 million for five-year warrants to purchase eight million shares of Maxus stock at $13 per share.

Maxus agreed to settle with Siegel after determining that he had "no assets that we could reach with a judgment against him," Maxus attorney Chester J. Hinshaw has said.

The lawsuit had charged that Siegel gave confidential information about the pending Natomas deal to Boesky, who then allegedly made millions in illegal profits trading Natomas stock.

Boesky has testified in a deposition that he couldn't remember why he purchased huge blocks of Natomas stock in 1983.

The timing of the buys often coincided with supposedly secret decisions regarding the takeover.

Maxus is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company based in Dallas.
