month. Students would be required to attend these sessions. Gourrier also suggested six hours of required courses.

"Basically, the (first) class would be remedial work," Gourrier said. "Everyone is on different levels so if we start off at the bottom and work everyone up, everyone can be on the same page."

The second class would be one of the classes already offered at A&M.

"The long-range goal is to have multicultural ideals infused throughout the curriculum, but today professors either are not prepared or not educated enough to teach these classes in that manner," Meuret said instructors should be the ones to determine the multiculturalism course content.

"The classes have got to depend on how they are taught," Meuret said. "You have them now as optional, and teachers are allowed to teach in the way that he or she believes. If it's required, there is no assurance that they won't follow what he or she necessarily believes or state things against history."

Gourrier said he wondered if A&M is doing all it can in working toward multicultural ideals.

"It is Texas A&M's duty, obligation and job to make sure that its graduates are well-rounded students," Gourrier said. "A&M is not doing its job to prepare students to live in a multicultural society. Currently, Texas A&M is preparing its students for the technology of the year 2000, but the society of the 1950s."

"A&M cannot afford to not educate its students," Gourrier said. "These classes are important enough that A&M should do whatever it can to find funding (for the classes)."

PTL pays creditors following bankruptcy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — More than $49 million has been paid to creditors of the defunct PTL religious empire, but the contributors known as lifetime partners got nothing, says the final report in the bankruptcy case.

The report, filed with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Columbia, S.C., ended what the lawyers who wrote it called "one of the most bizarre and singularly extraordinary bankruptcy cases ever."

The PTL ministry owed $130 million after it collapsed in 1987 in the midst of a sex-and-money scandal that sent founder Jim Bakker to federal prison.

About 116,000 lifetime partners had contributed $158 million to the ministry in return for the promise of free lodging at PTL's Christian theme park.

The partners had argued in court that they were entitled to reimbursements. But a judge ruled last year that they were not considered creditors and shouldn't expect anything in return for their contributions.

If they had been considered unsecured priority creditors, they would have divided the $1.3 million that went instead to the Internal Revenue Service and the state of South Carolina, the Winston-Salem Journal reported Wednesday. Each partner would have received no more than $3, said Joseph Allman of Winston-Salem, the last of four court-appointed trustees who handled the case.

More than $43 million went to secured creditors, primarily lending institutions that held liens or mortgages on property, and claims from York County, S.C.

About $4.5 million paid off debts including attorneys' fees, bills from television stations and cable companies, and employees' claims for salaries and medical benefits.

The IRS and the state of South Carolina, which had submitted claims totaling $66 million, agreed to share the $1.3 million, the only money left after other debts were paid. The IRS will get 83 percent, and 17 percent will go to the state.

Bakker resigned as PTL president in 1987 after confessing that he had a sexual encounter with a church secretary in a Florida hotel. Subsequently, evidence surfaced that he had mismanaged PTL money.

Bakker was convicted in 1989 of defrauding his followers. Prosecutors said Bakker diverted $3.7 million in PTL money for personal use.

Street art portrays beaten man

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — At the intersection of Warren and 23rd, where empty lots and boarded buildings bear witness to the riots of the 1960s, there's a new focal point: the police violence of the 1990s.

On a wall adorned with flowers, a plastic-covered picture of Malice Green, a 35-year-old man beaten to death by police last week.

It has become a gathering point for neighborhood residents who come to see the spot where Green died, to see where gravel has been spread to hide the blood stains.

"I can't believe this is happening in my city," Carrie Washington, a mother of three grown children, said in frustration.

"The police used to be our friends."

The death of the black motorist at the hands of a racially mixed group of police has roiled this city noted for its integrated, neighborhood-based policing.

The case resounds with disquieting echoes of the Rodney King case. But those familiar with Detroit's police say Malice Green's death points to something else: an undermanned force lacking the money or leadership to weed out "thumpers," the violent cops of both races.

Green, an unemployed father of five, died from head injuries in a fracas Thursday with police.

While no official details have been released, witnesses say the confrontation began as Green dropped off a friend near a boarded-up hair salon suspected to be a crack house.

Two plainclothes officers in "power unit," an unmarked car, assigned to high crime areas, confronted Green.

Witnesses said police began beating him when he refused to drop something in his hand, identified variously as a wallet, a piece of paper or drugs.
