Principal takes 260 students to see Malcolm X

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — Movie director Spike Lee's advice for students to skip school Wednesday and go see his new film biography of 1960s black activist "Malcolm X" did not go unnoticed by one Austin high school principal.

Instead of trying to keep students from skipping class, LBJ High School Principal Eddie Orum turned the movie, which opened nationally Wednesday, into a field trip.

Orum decided to take 260 students from the largely black high school to view and take notes on the 3-hour epic.

"My philosophy is that if you have something that is that significant to people, regardless of which side they stand on, I would rather supervise my kids and make it a learning experience than open it up and allow them to see something that is not supervised," Orum said.

Orum's students were expected to answer study questions on the film afterwards.

Lee had encouraged blacks to skip work and school to see the movie, which he said "will be an education" that "you will receive in the classroom."
