Yew drug helps some cancers, study shows

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The first phase of a two-year study of the semi-synthetic drug taxotere, a close relative of taxol, indicates the drug has promise in treating ovarian and breast cancer, The University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center said Tuesday.

Results of the study by Dr. Richard Pazdur, associate professor of medicine at M.D. Anderson in Houston, will be published in Wednesday's issue of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Pazdur reports that taxotere, which is derived from the needles of the European yew tree, stalled tumor growth in six of 10 ovarian cancer patients and produced a partial remission of breast cancer in another patient in the first phase of a two-year study.

Thirty-nine patients enrolled in the clinical study were treated with different levels of taxotere up to 12 months. All had advanced cancers including ovarian, colon, breast and uterine and previous treatments for all of the patients had failed.

"This study seems to back up pre-clinical evidence suggesting taxotere, like taxol, may be an effective anti-cancer drug," Pazdur said.

Wilson

Wilson's intentions are to unify and feels that Wilson may be turning the entire issue of multiculturalism into a black versus white and straight versus gay issue.

"Our whole effort is to unify people, not to draw lines between them," Mazzullo said. "GLSS works toward the understanding of all types of diversity at A&M."

Bolden said she hopes the energy to move the issue of multiculturalism toward a solution.

Walker voiced his concern for a discrimination-free campus and said that a successful solution will be reached only if there is open communication. Walker said he, along with other student leaders, had made a concerted effort to contact Wilson, but to no avail.

"For us to work together, the communication path must be a two-way street," Walker said. "I wish he would respond to our efforts just so we would know that he's received our messages."

Also signing the letter sent to Wilson was Dr. Wendy Stock, associate professor of psychology and faculty advisor for the National Organization for Women. She was unavailable for comment.

Wilson did not return calls made to both his Austin and Houston offices.
