Insurance Association proposes reforms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The insurance industry took a big step toward shaping health-care reform Thursday by proposing a sweeping plan for universal coverage that would be financed partly by taxing Americans with generous benefits.

The Health Insurance Association of America said the draft proposal approved by its board will jump-start health-care reform. "A cornerstone of the plan is to cut costs and provide a package of essential" benefits to all Americans. Those are goals championed by President-elect Clinton. Clinton spokesman George Stephanopoulos said it was a breakthrough for the insurance industry trade group to "come around and say that we need a national health-care system."

The association's proposal rejects insurance-industry thinking before Clinton's victory, as it became clearer that the nation's $400 billion health-care system was out of control. The proposal would give insurers a more influential voice in the reform process. Stephanopoulos said the group has a right to try to influence future legislation. "If there is strong support across the country for national health insurance with real containment, and that is causing the insurance industry to cooperate with us, we want to work with them."

Private insurers would agree to provide coverage to every American. People would be covered either through their employers or their own means.
